PM for arranging book fairs at nat'l, int'l levels

UNB, Dhaka

Prime Minister Khaleda Zia has suggested for translating remarkable and resourceful Bengali books into English to portray Bangladesh's cultural and social heritage abroad.

She also called for arranging book fairs at national and international levels, particularly in London and New York where large number of Bangladeshi expatriates live.

Such fairs, she said, could be held in cooperation with Bangladesh embassies and publishers to boost the market of Bangladeshi books as well as to present the country's art, culture and literature abroad.

The prime minister made the suggestion when State Minister for Cultural Affairs Selima Rahman presented her a book titled Commemorative Book on Book Year 2002 at her office yesterday.

Bangla Academy published the commemorative book containing 57 articles on the perspective of Prime Minister Khaleda Zia's announcement of the year 2002 as a Book Year.

Khaleda said the objective of designating 2002 as Book Year was to build a habit of reading books, create public awareness and develop the publishing industry. The year 2003 was announced as a Library Year to meet that objective, she added.

Recalling her appeal to the countrymen on Pahela Baishakh, the first day of Bengali calendar, to present books to each other on various occasions, she said books could enrich the nation's literature and culture.

She said there is no alternative to education in the present knowledge-based society, and knowledge-based development can only take place through reading books and promoting education.

Selima apprised the prime minister that steps have been taken to keep a public library in the capital city open for long hours so that people can read books at their suitable and convenient time.

Meetings, book fairs and other programmes were being organised across the country on the occasion of the Library Year, she said.

Cultural Secretary Modabbir Hossain Chowdhury, Bangla Academy President Prof Wakil Ahmed and Bangla Academy DG Mansur Musa were present on the occasion.
