Drama A play with politics in mind

"Tomasha" performed at Mahila Samity

FAYZA HAQ

SHIM Das, the director of the play "Tomasha" which was recently staged at Mahila Samity, said, "The 'Tomasha' is about the electoral malpractice and atrocities. There were the atrocities on the minorities, there was oppression of the opposition parties and inhumanifies on many after the election on 11th October. There was killing, rape, seizure and burning of properties. This is a 'docudrama which is episodic in nature. I did not show rape as such on the stage but sounds of women in pain shouting out for help and slides that suggested the heinous act. There were also the complaints of the fathers against the torture and inhumanity. I felt that it was even more effective than the actual presentation of such an act, say on the screen.

"I did not want to keep women as performers in the play as it is a political one and can be closed any time with police action. On April 4, the play was incidentally closed by the police in Chittagong Muslim Hall after 50 minutes of performance. The way the play has been reported about in the papers, although we are pleased that peo-ple will definitely be attracted at the same time there is fear of the stoppage of the play although we have come from far to give our message," said Ashim Das , the director of "Tomasha".

"There is no plot in the play as such. It is a combination of many incidents . By 'Tomasha' we mean darkness . We took the articles written by people like Mumtazuddin Ahmed, Shahriar Kabir, Abdul Ghaffar Chowdhury, Bollal Sen, Muntasir Mamun, Abu Musa and others that appeared in newspapers. We then dramatised the pieces such as Wahidul Hug's writing was transformed into an entire scene. Sometimes we used cartoons such as the one by Shishir Bhattacharya where a Jamaat leader went to the Savar National Memorial and an old man wiped his feet with his tears which was transformed into another scene. We show how perpetrators have gone to ask for forgiveness for the crimes of 1971.

Asked to say a few words about Avant Garde, the group, Das said, We wanted to promote professionalism. We tried to guarantee that the performers would have money as much as paying for their rickshaw fare to and from work."

Talking about the problems that he faced in making the play Das said, " Since there was fear of shutting down the play, the publicity went against the good turn out of audience for the play as people days). We show a famous lawyer, who after October 2001, went to relieve the discrimination of human rights in a foreign country when there were problems galore among the masses for him to hold up back home instead Bangladesh. We depicted how a famous poet changed his sides with the change of government. We felt that such a prominent person should have shown more loyalty and stability. This came under strong criticism from certain quarters. My perceptions may be wrong but I have depicted what I gleaned from my readings of newspapers and maga zines

The facts were simply lifted and edited.' Touching on whether there was a lot of the element of violence in the play, Ashim Das said, "There is violence in the words but not in any of the actions on stage. It stirs you and makes you think. I feel that it will move people and one does not have to be particularly politically motivated in getting angry about incidents like rape and carnage because it could happen to anybody and one could read the play on a universal level if one stretches one's imagination. One could very well be in the place of one of the sufferers and there are corrupt politicians the world over from time immemorial." Dwelling on whether they had enough funds, Das said, " The play depends on our personal contribu-tions and the sale of the tickets which certainly have not been enough. As it is, in Bangladesh, one often has to have some other profession apart from being a stage actor. A human rights activist, advocate Rana Das Gupta took a personal interest in helping us out with donation and arranging for sale of tickets.'
