One & Only Star Search 2003

CULTURE DESK

THE selection process of the much coveted 'One & Only Star Search Award' for 2003 is continuing in regular paces. The Chittagong auditions of the spellbinding contest were held on July 26 at Hotel Agrabad. Benson & Hedges has taken the initiative to seek out talented musicians across the nation and give them the chance to demonstrate their genius on a national scale. The 'One & Only Star Search' has been the platform, which has already paved the way to national acclaim for many gifted musicians--Vikings and Steeler to name a few. They now form the living inspiration and role models for the innumerable aspiring musicians in the four corners of the nation.

The panel of judges in this year's One & Only Star Search

Rashed Uddin was selected the best performer in the Chittagong zone.

Chittagong Auditions sieved through an astounding number of promising musicians and Rashed Uddin was officially declared as the Best Regional Performer. Chances are the lucky winners may just make it to the grand finale! The judges were confronted with numerous highly talented musicians all competing for the coveted trophy and had a difficult time selecting the very best out of an array of gifted musicians.

The final decision of the judges comprising of Fuad Nasser and Kumar Bishwajit were not solely based on musical composition but performance also played a key factor in the selection process. The overwhelming number of applications that were submitted proves there are countless creative blooming musicians who deserve recognition for their artistry.

The man who discovered Elvis music" according to Phillips, and was raised on "the black man's blues and southern country music". Elvis had listened to several musicians who had been produced by Phillips: Rupert Thomas, BB King, Ike Turner, and Rocket 88 by Jackie Brenston, regarded by many as the first rock and roll record.

But the record which eventually brought him to the studio was Little Junior Parker's Mystery Train, a song which became an Elvis classic later.

"He was a very unusual-sounding person so I had to make sure we didn't go down the beaten path", says Phillips. Recognising his potential talent, Phillips wanted to bring out the boy's influences, or as he calls it: "Black man's fabulous music done by a white man, but without mimicking it." Bursting onto a vigorous pop and country music scene was not easy with singers like Dean Martin, Frank Sinatra, Tony Bennett and Hank Williams around. Whites in the Southern states were unwilling to accept that black people might be successful performers. Phillips wanted to change that.

He just wanted people to "make up their own minds" after hearing the music that he so loved. In an environment in which segregation was the norm, Elvis was going to help black music and musicians find a wider audience.

In 1954, Elvis's first recording That's All Right was produced. But Phillips found it an uphill struggle to get black-influenced music on the radio. Even a local black radio DJ wouldn't give the record airplay fearing that he would lose his job. But a few pioneers - such as Memphis DJ Dewey Phillips - did play.

Typically modest, Elvis saw the record's eventual success as a fluke, Phillips recalls. After four more singles Phillips sold his contract as Elvis's manager to RCA records for $35,000 to alleviate his financial troubles.

I Forgot to Remember to Forget--Elvis's last single for Sun and first for RCA--went to number one in the country charts.

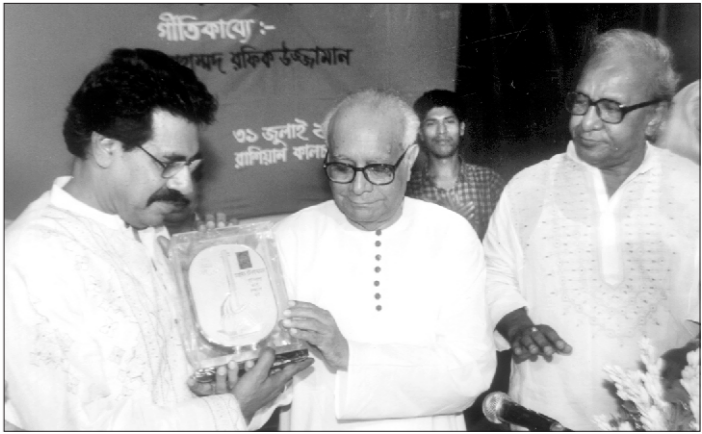

Phillips says he was extremely close to the singer--12 years his junior--in the early days. "He probably loved nobody as he did me, outside his mother and father."

"After talking to Elvis and his parents, we decided to do it if he would do it. But Elvis wasn't looking to move", he says. While acknowledging that Elvis was inevitably going to move to a major record label, Phillips can't help insisting that his protégé would have been better off to stay with him.
