NURUL ALAM

About 50 per cent of industries at Nasirabad industrial belt have been closed in the past ten years due to frequent labour unrest, wrong government policies, bad management and flow of smuggled goods into the local markets.

Thousands of workers and employees were thrown out of jobs following closure of the industries, sources said.

Nasirabad industrial belt was once known as the largest industrial hub in the port city.

Over 200 small, medium and heavy industries are located at Nasirabad where mills and factories started to be set up from 1964, sources said.

Nasirabad industrial belt was initially launched as Sholashahar light industrial area that later flourished as the main industrial hub with the set up of more factories.

This area once hummed with huge number of workers and employees.

Acting President of the Chittagong Chamber of Commerce and Industry (CCCI) Ershad Ullah said, "Introduction of free market economy back-fired forcing closure of about 50 per cent of the industries at Nasirabad".

"Besides, wrong government policies, freestyle black market operation in the country, bad management and labour unrest gradually became sick. But the corrupt officials of the nationalised mills became rich though the organisations fell sick, Ershad added.

Later, those sick industries were disinvested by the successive governments in a bid to reactivate them, Ershad said adding high production costs and inefficiency of management almost baffled the instead of pumping the money for better operation of the sick units, sources said.

Even some of them reportedly invested the loan money, taken against the sick industries, in smuggling to make quick bucks, sources added.

The bankers should be liable for such diverting of fund, Ershad said. The banker had connivance with those loan borrowers and as such it was not properly monitored to identify the lapses at the field level of investment, he added.

Former president of Nasirabad Industries Owners Association (NIOA) Monwar Ahmed said it was the market situation that led to the closure of about 50 per cent industries.

"Fall in demand of local products, high manufacturing costs and uneven competition with the goods of neighbouring countries compelled to close down those industries", Monwar said.

move to make those sick units profitable.

Some of the owners were even forced to close down factories due to frequent labour unrest, he said

Some owners of the sick and disinvested industries reportedly managed huge bank loans in the name of running capital and reforms.

But most of the loans reportedly were diverted to other business caused a serious damage to this industrial belt," CCCI leader said.

This industrial belt had witnessed some changes immediately after independence as the units earlier owned by non-Bengali people, were nationalised under corporation system, Ershad said. Due to bad management and corruption by a section of officials, the nationalised mills and factories

'EXTORTION' IN THE NAME OF CHECKING ?

Most of the drivers of auto-rickshaws, both the two-stroke three wheelers and the CNG ones, in the port city have to go through an ordeal every day. The on-duty traffic police frequently intercept the auto-rickshaws and sometimes force the passengers to get down in the name of checking documents or searching for criminals. It has been a common practice, especially at city's Jamal Khan and Ghani Bakery intersections, since long. The auto-rickshaw drivers and owners alleged that this is a means of 'extorting' toll from them. Those who do not give in to their demand often faces harassment, they said. Some passengers also accused the police of misbehaviour. On August 2, the auto-rickshaw drivers and owners took out an unprecedented procession of over 200 auto-rickshaws in the city in protest against such harassment. The long caravan had started from in front of the Jamiatul Falah Mosque at Dampara area and ended in front of the CMP headquarters at Laldighi. Later, the leaders of Auto-rickshaw Driver-Owner Oikya Parishad submitted a memorandum to the police commissioner and sought his cooperation. A top-ranking CMP official, however, denied the allegations and said a few cops may be involved in the illegal act, but it would not be fair to put the blame on the entire traffic department.

Chittagong fears final jolt

MOHIT UL ALAM

Since November 1997, when the greater Chittagong was jolted by a severe earthquake, reading more than 5 on the Richter Scale, Chittagong so far experienced numerous tremors.

In a word, the people here are living dangerously under death sentence, awaiting their link with life to be severed by one final jolt. Then everything will be plain dead.

The other day The Daily Star published a seismographic map of the inner plates of the earth in which the location of Chittagong showed itself to be at the centre of the zone, which receives the most vibrations. Is Chittagong then to be sacrificed to the bowel movements of the earth?

Of all natural calamities, earthquake is the most unpredictable. There is, arguably, no knowing a second earlier that it will occur. Therefore, it owes nothing to human responsibility. Precautionary measures may be taken, but of what help they would be nobody knows.

But the environmental scientists will disagree with the above view. They rightly think that the occurrence of an earth-tremor may not be foretold, but it is partly man-made, and proper nature and urban planning can lessen the extent of damage. And, that is true.

The earth inside is somewhat similar to the human belly. There are constant motions and counter motions going on in the stomach in order to adjust itself to the pressure that the digestive system is subjecting it to. Our mother earth is also patiently tolerating the thousands of acts of digging, boring, piling, dynamiting, embanking, and under-grounding on the surface of the earth and in the sea. All these human acts create strain, stress, tension and anxieties on her, and she moves a plate there, or turns on her side, or just does something to relieve herself a bit. Her slightest movement may spell disaster for her children, particularly of Chittagong.

So what the humans should do is to create lesser and lesser pressure on the mother earth. In my layman's view the reason why Chittagong is vulnerable to a greater frequency of earthquake can be attributed to the installing of the hydroelectric project in the hills at Kaptai.

The Kaptai Dam was built about 40 years ago for storing of water of the River Karnaphuli in order to produce electric power by the pressure of water. It has done, I believe, a fundamental damage to the ecological balance in this part of the world. The hills are holding up a huge mass of water on a very fragile foundation, the nearest analogy of which can be a tender-aged child carrying a heavy pitcher on its shoulder with water full to the brim. The child may collapse under the pressure, and so can the Kaptai Dam.

Modern engineering disapproves of turning a river's direction by building bank on it. Besides, after 40 years of exhaustive use, the Kaptai project has developed inefficiency, and its output is now much below a desired rate. There are other power producing plants in the country doing a better job.

Given the political turmoil that the Kaptai Dam has given birth to, I think, it is now time we dismantled the dam, gradually, phase by phase, and let Karnaphuli flow in its own original style, the water-level come down in the Rangamati Lake, and the hill people live ever happily after; and Chittagong to remain tremor-free.

Road renovation work is going on at a snail's pace, resulting in unbearable traffic congestion on Arakan Sarak (Chittagong-Cox's Bazar road) in the city.
