Corruption, red-tapism make LDC dev elusive

UNB, Dhaka

Weak incentives for performance, corruption, imperfect monitoring and administrative logjams impede public service delivery in many least developed countries (LDCs), making their development elusive.

The World Development Report 2004, ready to be launched ahead of the IMF-World Bank September 23-24 annual meeting in Dubai, observed this and suggested measures for the LDCs to achieve their Millennium Development Goals (MDGs).

It says too often key services fail poor people in access, in quantity, in quality.

This imperils a set of development targets known as MDGs, which call for halving the global in poverty and broad improvements in human development by 2015.

The report -- World Development Report 2004: Making Services Work for Poor People -- will be released today simultaneously from Washington and the capitals of all member-countries.

15 indigenous families flee after attack by criminals

Before drafting the report, World Development Report (WDR) teams visited countries to investigate the quality of services.

Such a team conducted a daylong consultation in Dhaka a few months back with a group of Bangladeshi policymakers, NGO leaders, academics and donor officials.

The team revealed the reasons for poor service delivery in Bangladesh in education, health, water supply, sanitation and other public services.

The attitude of public servants, who are mainly involved in rent seeking, and the "poverty of institutions", with a centralised legacy of bureaucracy from colonial times and a constitutionally-mandated weak parliament have been commonly blamed for poor services.

Concern was also expressed about the private sector in education and health in Bangladesh creating an elite, and possibly undermining political support for public delivery of these services.

Unification of health, family planning wings reversed

NAIMUL HAQ

The health ministry has reversed its earlier decision to unify health and family planning wings of the ministry, sparking off a controversy in the health sector.

A statutory regulatory order (SRO) against unification of the health and family planning wings was issued on September 14 and it will come into force on January 1 next year. It aims to avoid 'clash of interests' of personnel of the two wings, official sources said.

Earlier on December 27, 1998, the first SRO was issued seeking to unify health and family planning delivery services up to upazila level. On July 9, 2001, a second SRO was issued to unify healthcare delivery services up to directorate level.

The Bangladesh Medical Association (BMA), the apex body of more than 30,000 medical practitioners, has strongly protested the latest SRO, saying it goes against modern concepts of healthcare and also contravenes the agreement reached at the international conference on population and development (ICPD) in 1995.

The then as also the present Prime Minister Khaleda Zia signed the ICPD agreement, which stated that health and population service should be delivered from the same site in a unified manner, officials said.

In the wake of the ICPD agreement, the then and present Finance

Gas export, transit to help reduce trade gap: Tripathy

UNB, Dhaka

India considers export of natural gas and offer of land transit by Bangladesh as two effective means of reducing the yawning trade gap between Dhaka and New Delhi.

"Export of gas and offer of transit facilities on which bilateral agreement was reached way back in 1972 are viable options," the Indian High Commissioner to Dhaka, ML Tripathy, told the New Delhi-based Sahara Times.

He, however, said increased export is the other option for restoring a balance in the two-way trade, and for that Bangladesh would need to expand its export basket by offer

WB may double aid if reform pace sustained

UNB, Dubai

The World Bank has indicated if the current reform process in Bangladesh is sustained, economic assistance to the country can be doubled-- from around $500 million in the last fiscal to one billion this year.

The assurances came when Finance and Planning Minister M Saifur Rahman called on World Bank President James D Wolfensohn during the bank's fund meeting in Dubai on Friday, according to an official message received in Dhaka yesterday.

The WB president expressed satisfaction at the pace of reforms in Bangladesh and assured adequate financial support for the ongoing reforms.

Saifur observed that "reform is extremely useful in stabilising the economy, but it often contributes to social instability by reducing employment".

In this regard, the funding agency's management agreed that new investment projects should be undertaken in the country to create new jobs.

The finance minister suggested that, in addition to human resource development, further investments are needed in agriculture, rural development, water supply, sanitation and transportation including railways, ports and inland waterways.

The World Bank president assured the finance minister that the bank was already working for new investment projects in priority areas suggested by the minister.

As the finance minister urged the bank management to expand the operations of the International Finance Corporation in Bangladesh, Wolfensohn directed the IFC officials to undertake review of its operations.
