Clijsters, Mauresmo face-off

France's Amelie Mauresmo defeated world No. 1-elect Justine Henin-Hardenne here Sunday to earn a shot at defending champion Kim Clijsters in the final of the elite season-ending WTA Tour Championships.

France's Amelie Mauresmo defeated world No. 1-elect Justine Henin-Hardenne here Sunday to earn a shot at defending champion Kim Clijsters in the final of the elite season-ending WTA Tour Championships.
Mauresmo, who practically had her bags packed to go home on Saturday, defeated the reigning Roland Garros and US Open champion 7-6 (7/2), 3-6, 6-3, while Clijsters rallied to beat American Jennifer Capriati 4-6, 6-3, 6-0.
"You're always disappointed when you lose," said Belgium's Henin-Hardenne, who started the tournament battling the effects of a sinus infection. "But I have the feeling I gave everything. I wasn't able to win the match."
"And Amelie played a good match. She came a lot to the net, she serves well. I had chances during the match, in the first and third set. But she always came back and broke twice."
Mauresmo, who won titles at Warsaw and last week at Philadelphia to brighten an injury-disrupted season, said the win was one of the biggest of her career.
"The way I finished it off, and the way I handled the loss of the second set against a top player like Justine," Mauresmo said, "One of the best."
She dropped her serve to open the third set, but kept her composure and broke back in the second game. Henin-Hardenne netted a high volley to give up her serve in the sixth game, and Mauresmo clung to her advantage, eventually taking the match on her fourth match point.
Despite the defeat, Henin-Hardenne will replace Clijsters atop the rankings when they are released next week, becoming just the eighth player to hold the year-end No. 1 spot.
With both Serena and Venus Williams absent, a Clijsters and Henin-Hardenne had appeared to be on course for another marquee showdown, after Henin-Hardenne defeated her compatriot in the final at both the French and US Opens.

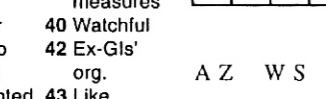

Moin taken back

The decision came under strong criticism in the national media despite Sohail's claim the decision was targeted at a future with young wicketkeeper Akmal.

The decision came under strong criticism in the national media despite Sohail's claim the decision was targeted at a future with young wicketkeeper Akmal.
"The selectors have reconsidered the inclusion of Moin after a rethink on their part," PCB chief executive Rameez Raja said.
"They felt it would be better to have two wicketkeepers in the training camp for New Zealand."
New Zealand, expected here on November 20, will play their first match in Faisalabad on November 22.
Their itinerary includes two matches in Rawalpindi on November 24 and 25 and another two in Lahore on November 29 and December 1.
