

Most CNG filling stations lack DoE permission

AVIK SANWAR RAHMAN

A committee formed by the ministry of communication to assess the safety and security standards of Compressed Natural Gas (CNG) filling stations in Dhaka has found that 90 percent of the pumps are not environment friendly.

"Any industry or establishment should seek permission from the Department of Environment (DoE) before becoming operational. But so far only six CNG filling stations have fulfilled that pre-requisite," said a high official of DoE.

"We prefer industrial and commercial locations instead of residential areas to set up CNG stations as public safety measures but most pumps have not followed that guideline," added the DoE official.

The communication ministry's sub committee on site selection did not have representation of the DoE in it, which made it easier for interested entrepreneurs to get approval to set up pumps wherever they wished.

Rupantorita Praktik Gas Ltd. (RPGL), AC Police, Traffic, Railway and Rajuk are sub-committee members.

Establishing CNG filling stations near residential areas could have serious implications especially if the site is not tested properly by DoE, believe environmentalists.

A pump located in the wrong place could hamper normal traffic movement, increase noise and air pollution and severely effect the sanctity of a residential area. In case of accidents, residents are exposed to the deadly consequences.

Initially, an inter-ministerial meeting concluded that it was best not to seek the permission from the DoE to establish CNG stations as the process took a long time.

"The delay of getting permission and the ever increasing demand for low cost environment friendly gas was the main reason for the decision," said a high official of the energy and mineral resources ministry.

However, the ministry has recently asked all the owners of CNG filling stations to get the approval of the DoE from now on.

The ministry has so far permitted 1059 organisations and entrepreneurs to establish 2096 CNG filling stations across the country. Among these stations 43 have been established in Dhaka, one in Chittagong and another on the Comilla-Chittagong high way.

Another seven stations are being set up in Dhaka and should start operating by April this year.

Two inmates of the Old Home at Agargaon

TALE OF AN OLD HOME

Days pass off pretty well, nights bring memories

SABRINA KARIM MURSHED

The thought of the elderly living together in the same quarters, spending the final chapter of their lives in freedom and the pride of self-reliance is not a natural concept in this country. But the Old Home run by Bangladesh Association for the Aged at Dhaka's Agargaon is trying to change that.

This 44-year-old NGO introduced the old home in 2000 as it felt that the aged in urban areas were fast becoming lonelier than they have been in the past with nuclear families breaking up the joint-family culture. Also, with offspring living abroad, many parents suddenly found themselves alone.

"We thought the old home could help this target group but initially the response was disappointing," said Badrul Ahsan, social welfare officer of the Home.

However, boarders started enrolling once they were convinced of the philosophy behind the venture. Now some 15 people live there whereas there were only six last year of which eight are women.

The home can accommodate 30 people. Ahsan mentioned that old people who are relatively solvent and still doing well physically are encouraged to become boarders. Monthly rent for a room consisting two single beds and an attached bathroom is Tk 3,000.

Larger rooms with six beds in each of them are also available and will cost Tk 1,250 a person. The home has a full-time cook for boarders who jointly pay for groceries.

The lodgers have no complaints except the feeling of emptiness inside every now and then.

"Days pass off pretty well but the hard-

Initially it was disappointing. But the concept of old home in getting response. Run by an NGO, the home at Agargaon now has 15 inmates, eight of them women.

est to bear is the silence of darkness," said Anjuman Ara, a former teacher of Dhanmondi Girls High School who has been residing at the home for the last six months.

"Sweet memories of my family, when we were all together, seem like a fairytale and haunt me throughout the night," she added.

However, Anjuman Ara still prefers to stay at the home as both her children live abroad and she does not want to live with relatives.

"There is a sense of obligation if I stay with relatives. My children at first did not endorse this idea of me living in an old-age home as I have an apartment of my own. But later my son admitted that it was a bold and wise decision," she said.

Most of the boarders said that they came to the home for personal security and freedom at the same time.

"I have to depend on servants if I live alone in an apartment," said Mahtabuddin Ahmed, a former Deputy Director of NSI (National Security Intelligence). He has been lodging here since

The widower has the eldest of his three daughters in Dhaka but doesn't fancy staying with her.

"I have more independence if I stay here," he smiled. Ahmed said the first days were the hardest as loneliness used to creep in but gradually he came to terms with it.

For someone like Yakutunnesa this is the only place to call home. Widowed at an early age, Yakutunnesa does not have children to look after her. But a caring niece arranged for her to live at the old home, for which she is grateful.

Perhaps more than anything, it is the bond that develops among the boarders which is most unique in the home. They have people of the same age to talk to and go through every emotion together.

"Sometimes children and relatives prevent aged people from coming to the old home as this is not an established concept in our society. But they should come out of such prejudice and let the elderly decide for themselves," said Anjuman Ara.
