

Learning to drive

Sitting behind the driver while he takes you to your destination is not always fun. If you have the need for speed then you better learn how to drive. Other than the fun, it gives you certain privileges; most important of them all is you get to save the money that you pay your driver.

Early in the morning

Early in the morning is the best time for beginners to drive, especially the first seven days. Traffic movement is low during this period of the day. Beginners feel comfortable when the streets are empty. However, one must learn to drive in busy streets as well. Move on to busier streets gradually.

Manual gear

It is always best to start with a car that has manual gear. While the whole world is going auto, manual gear cars are still helping people to learn to balance the four wheeled metal object.

Don't panic

When people first start driving some of them panic. A good instructor always helps the learner when they need it the most. Learning to trust your instructor is very important. Remember there is an emergency brake in front of his seat. However do not remain dependent on him for long. Try to take control slowly. If you think that the instructor will come to your rescue all the time then you will learn very slowly. Keep your eyes and ears open. Be alert so that you don't hit anyone but don't be too stiff and do not fight with the steering wheel.

Wear comfortable shoes

While learning to drive always wear comfortable shoes. Both the feet remain very busy during driving. At the beginning it is hard to balance them. To feel at ease always wear very comfortable shoe. There may be muscle pain in the first few days. However it all becomes perfectly clear after a few days of practice.

Watch out for cops

Training cars are regular targets of cops for easy money making schemes. Ask your instructor to bring all the legal papers of the vehicle especially the fitness certificate, as vehicles used by training schools are rusty and worn out most of the times.
