GI, Dutch soldier, Ukrainian officer and 8 Iraqis killed in attacks

AFP, Najaf

Gunfire boomed across the Iraqi city of Najaf yesterday, a day after the interim government said its offensive against Shiite Muslim militiamen would continue in the wake of failed peace talks.

An AFP correspondent heard tank fire and saw smoke rising from the direction of the cemetery, north of the holy shrine of Imam Ali, which has been a militia stronghold since a spring uprising against foreign troops.

A ceasefire Friday suspended days of fierce fighting between rebel leader Moqtada Sadr's Mehdi Army and a US and Iraqi government forces to allow for negotiations, which broke down the next day.

Mortar and tank fire, punctuated with machine-gun fire continued into the early afternoon in the Old City.

The area has been sealed off by US forces, who were only allowing people to leave. US soldiers fired warning shots into the air to hurry

Flood-hit villagers crowd markets for jobs

RAFIQ HASAN, back from Daudkandi

As floodwaters are receding gradually, flood-hit villagers in Daudkandi upazila of Comilla, particularly poor ones, now fear a longer spell of miseries due to lack of jobs.

They are desperately looking for jobs to start life anew as government help and relief from various organisations and individuals would stop after the recession of floods.

Hundreds of people now crowd the village markets and roads every day in search of work to make a living.

Complete recession of water from the low-lying area will take a couple of months more and farming will start after that, creating jobs for them, the sufferers said.

Fishing is also a major profession of the locals but it will be in full swing only when water recedes further.

The floods left a trail of devastation in almost all villages in the upazila, damaging houses, crops, cattle and poultry and washing away roads and culverts.

"We lost everything in the flood and have survived so far on our small savings and food assistance from the government and various organisations and individuals. Now it will be more difficult for us to survive if we do not get work," said Abdul Mannan of Lalpur, a village located between the rivers Meghna and Gumti.

Many other villagers echoed him.

Lalpur, around 10 km from Daudkandi upazila headquarters, is mostly under water till now and country boats are the only mode of transport. This correspondent reached the village by an engine boat on Friday.

Harunur Rashid, former chairman of Mazidpur union parishad, said there was hardly any house in the village that was not submerged by floodwater. All the 18 villages in the union have been affected by the flood.

The villagers also suffered huge losses because fish from big ponds and fish farms escaped as they went under water. He estimated the loss

"Today we have declared the start of a bloody war and, by the will of God, the ground will shake beneath the feet of each and every Italian," said the statement.

Its authenticity could not be immediately verified.

"We call on all our cells to hit all targets in Italy and to strike repeatedly and with strength until this government withdraws (its troops) from Iraq. We will not stop until
