Thirty women's rights organisations staged a demonstration yesterday demanding direct election to the parliamentary seats reserved for women.

They strongly opposed the bill regarding the women's seats the government is going to pass in the current session of parliament, saying that the bill is not consistent with the constitution.

The organisations formed human chains in front of the High Court and Muktagon under the banner of Samajik Protirodh Committee and Sammilita Nari Samaj.

The women leaders said they would not accept any law that give a chance to the major political parties to share the reserved seats.

They also called on all political parties to reject the bill.

Shamsunnahar Joysna, general secretary of Alliance Women's Forum, said the government always lays emphasis on empowerment of women, but, on the other hand, it undermines the legal and constitutional rights of women.
