Govt urged not to give immunity to WB

Political parties, NGOs threaten movement

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Different political parties and non-governmental organisations yesterday called on the government not to pass any law giving immunity to the World Bank (WB).

They also threatened to launch a tough movement if any law in this regard is passed in the current session of parliament.

Economic progress will be jeopardised if the government grants immunity to the WB, political leaders and development activists said at a protest rally in the city.

They said the cabinet okayed a draft bill titled 'The International Financial Organisation (Amendment) Act 2004' on July 4 which will put the WB above law once it is passed in parliament.

Workers Party President Rashed Khan Menon said the WB has no contribution to the development activities of Bangladesh.

Granting immunity to the bank would be counterproductive for the development of the country, he added.

Jatiya Samajtantrik Dal (JSD) leader Shirin Akhter said the bank is responsible for the closure of mills and factories in the country.

In the past two decades, no suggestion of the WB benefited Bangladesh, she said, adding that thousands of workers were rendered jobless instead.

"The WB always calls for transparency and accountability but now it is seeking immunity so that nobody can demand transparency in its activities," Shirin said.

Imamuddin, member-secretary of People's Health Movement, said the WB should refrain from interfering in internal politics.

36 children rescued at Dublar Char

Dry fish traders flee to avoid arrest

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Khulna

Coastguards launched a special combing operation at Dublar Char and its adjacent coastal belts of Bay of Bengal following rescue of 36 children on Monday night from different seasonal fish drying firms.

The children aged between seven to twelve years were brought from different parts of the country to fishermen villages of Dublar Char and other coastal belts for employing them in odd jobs without any salary.

Acting on tip-off, Commander Abdul Matin of Mongla Western Zone of Coastguards led the operation on Monday night at Dublar Char backed by a platoon of police.

Zahid Hossain, Officer-in-Charge of Mongla Police Station, said the rescued children, hauled from Noakhali, Nilphamari, Comilla and Chittagong districts would be sent back to their parents after proper investigation. They were allured with lucrative jobs here, Zahid said.

None of the employers could be arrested till yesterday as they managed to escape sensing presence of law enforcers during operation, coastguard sources said.

The children were treated as slaves by the owners of seasonal fish drying firms at Dublar Char, coastguards said. Some of the children said they used to live in subhuman condition there without food.

According to rescued children, most of the dry fish traders hailed from Chittagong and Noakhali. Some times we became victims of sodomy, they said.

Dublar Char is famous for dry fish (shutki machh). Country traders huge foreign exchange exporting dry fish from here every year.

Hundreds of fishermen and minor children are engaged in catching sea fishes here and dry them up under the scorching heat of the sun.

There are a dozen of fishermen's villages at Dublar Char where these hapless children are kept as hostages by dry fish traders, police and coastguard sources said.

The traders also harbour notorious pirates of the Sundarbans for plundering forest resources and smuggling of contraband goods through the sea routes, they said.

Greater empowerment of local govt bodies suggested

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Speakers at a workshop yesterday called for greater empowerment of local government bodies to institutionalise democracy and ensure good governance.

They also called on the lawmakers to play a more pro-active role in parliament and local government bodies in this regard.

The Khan Foundation organised the workshop on 'Role of MPs in local government' at Democracy Auditorium in the city.

The speakers pointed out that conflict between the lawmakers and the representatives of local government is a major obstacle to rural development.

The key role of MPs is to make laws and formulate policies on national issues, but they are more engaged in distributing rice and wheat allocated by the government and constructing roads and culverts in their constituencies, said Opposition Whip Faruk Khan.

The government should stop allocating rice and wheat in the name of MPs, he said, adding that local government should be entrusted with the local development activities.

Whip M Ashraf Hossain said
