

Letters will only be considered if they carry the writer's full name, address and telephone number (if any). The identity of the writers will be protected. Letters must be limited to 300 words. All letters will be subject to editing.

Hartal, yet again!

The opposition parties led by the Awami League called marathon hartals in response to the killing of the former finance minister SAMS Kibria. This once again demonstrates the profound truth in the "legendary antipathy" between Sheikh Hasina and Khaleda Zia and the agonising political instability that prevails in the country as a result.

The unabated grenade attack on Mr. Kibria demonstrates the crumbling law and order situation, which it must be stressed is not the sole making of either the BNP or the Awami League, but their rather combined failures to see what's at stake. However, questions have been raised as to why Mr. Kibria was left to bleed to death while an air ambulance/helicopter could have been easily dispatched. It has been reported that formal requests had been turned down in case of Mr. Kibria because of his insufficient "rank" while this emergency service was extended to a leader of BNP's student wing [1]. What if the situation had been reversed and the AL had been in power and god forbid a former BNP minister was suffering from injuries sustained in a potentially fatal attack? Would the state have made an attempt to save one of its most precious sons? I am truly ashamed to admit that I don't know the answer to that question.

I totally empathise with the anger of the late Mr. Kibria's family and their demand for a thorough investigation. In light of the grave nature of the harm caused, the stress they placed on having a "peaceful" protest is truly a lesson that the entire nation can learn from. It is also heartening to note that for their part the family has expressly kept their distance from the AL so as not to confuse justice with politics.

While the AL has every right to turn this killing into a political issue, it has no right to bring the country to a standstill for days upon end through hartals at the cost of hurting the livelihoods of millions of its citizens. No true statesman, let alone the late Mr. Kibria, would allow this. Recalling the deadline set by the AL in April 2004, no one has the right to topple an elected government - not then, not now, not ever. As the main opposition, the AL must put national interest over partisan ones. Unfortunately, it has (perhaps unwittingly) allowed itself to be used by India, which to the detriment and shock of the whole region, has lamely cited AL's street agitations to balk out of the Saarc summit. While one understands India prime minister's unwillingness to be publicly hob-nobbing with the King of Nepal at this time, it is not only unfair but also unbecoming of a regional power to be snubbing Bangladesh so undeservedly when the entire world was watching. The AL could have easily put India on the spot by (a) withdrawing the hartals and (b) making their own objective statement about the Saarc conference preparations as the Jatiya Party's Ersahad did [2]. A regional trade agreement signed sooner stands to help Bangladesh while hartals always set it back.

Hartals, by all accounts, are a very damaging and belligerent method of protest that has been rejected by the electorate, and will not bring Mr. Kibria back. If the true intention is to bring his killers to justice, the AL should focus on holding the BNP accountable on points of fact. If the government does not give it time and space in parliament, the opposition should launch a national media campaign through private TV channels (given BTV's continued failure to be objective and balanced) and newspapers; they should refute every statement of the authorities with facts of their own and leave it for the viewing public to choose between the truth and the lie. While in the short term this pressure will add to the international heat already on the BNP in seeing justice to this gruesome killing, in the long run it will also set a precedent for creating an alternative yet healthier and more powerful political forum which has less potential to turn violent. I am happy to note that the security forces in Bangladesh have vowed to prosecute violent and destructive protesters by taking video footage.

Finally, I truly believe that if the opposition engages in newer non-destructive methods of holding the government accountable, it will not only clear confusion and show leadership but also earn the empathy of the voting public rather than its ire. As a result, it will create a "win-win" atmosphere with Bangladesh being viewed as a progressive country ready for global participation in trade and development.

Shabbir A Bashar
San Francisco Bay Area,
California, US

Postponed summit

For the second time in less than two months, the Saarc summit has been postponed. While the one scheduled for Jan 9-11 in Dhaka had to be put off because the region and the world had to cope with the Tsunami disaster, the second postponement has been caused by India's decision to stay away.

This is the fifth time that India has been the cause of a Saarc summit postponement. In 2003, too, the conference scheduled in Islamabad had to be called off because New Delhi refused to confirm its participation.

Wednesday's Indian decision came in the wake of political developments in Nepal, but the official reason given by New Delhi for its decision was the security situation in its "neighbourhood".

This was a setback to Bangladesh, which has spent millions of taka for the preparation of the summit. Press reports say that Prime Minister Manmohan Singh did not wish to sit at the same forum with King Gyanendra, who declared an emergency in his kingdom after dismissing the government. India also cited the security situation at Dhaka, only to reverse its saying by sugar coating it a little bit on Feb. 05.

But, it's too little and too late. India's argument does not hold much water, because in every Saarc summit Indian leaders had no qualms about sitting with the king of Bhutan, which is lagging behind Nepal in terms of political development.

People believe that such a situation would not have been created if the government acted with determination. Pulak Kalabagan, Dhaka

Think about it

People of Bangladesh are peaceful, and they have a good reputation of being hospitable. But some incidents make us very worried as they damage our image. The present political situation in the country may project a false image of Bangladesh. I think the government is responsible for it. The ongoing violence in the country has made the political scenario unstable and insecure. And for that the Saarc summit had to be postponed, it is a great shame for us. Who else is responsible for it?

We have witnessed a long series of bomb blasts around the country in the recent years but the law enforcers have failed to find a single person who was behind the incidents.

People believe that such a situation would not have been created if the government acted with determination.

Pulak Kalabagan, Dhaka

Image crisis

The recent postponement of the Saarc summit followed by a deteriorating law and order situation, particularly the total failure in bringing to book the criminals behind the recent political killings, definitely outweighs the defensive arguments of the government high-ups. The establishment should understand that this is the age of information super highways and it is useless to blame the opposition political parties or the media (national or international), as the whole world is now very open and nothing goes unnoticed.

Pertinently, we were told by the government high-ups in the foreign office and elsewhere that Eliza Griswold's article in the New York Times Magazine of January 23, 2005 (The Next Islamist Revolution?) is "one sided, baseless and politically motivated." Is it really so? Can anyone take it for granted that the international community would just shut their eyes to Bangladesh despite a series of political killings over the past few years? It seems that even less than 3% religious bigots are now dictating terms over 97% progressive people of Bangladesh and that we have an establishment presiding over all these! It is very unfortunate that while many people would like to call Bangladesh a "moderate Muslim country", they keep almost mum even after the series of killings (or attempts to kill) of the distinguished journalists, intellectuals, and opposition political leaders, one after another. This can't be moderation, far less Muslim, so far we know from the Holy Book.

It is not even possible to get transports and go to the burial ground for burying the deceased.

For a number of lucky rich people, hartal is a holiday. They cannot understand the difficulty of the poor.

Foreign investment in the country gets affected by frequent hartals.

I would request our opposition leaders to understand the difficulties faced by the majority of the people.

Concerned

On e-mail

The country is going through a rough phase at the moment. Bangladesh has a history of chaotic political unrest since independence or creation of Bangladesh. If political leaders truly care about their countrymen why cannot they act with patience and respect the elected government. It seems that all of us are in a hurry to share the booties and we do not have the time to be considerate and courteous to others. In many cases political leaders are found to be embroiled in a dogfight on petty matters. If political leaders were dedicated to the people's welfare and the country's development, they would not have called a marathon hartal. Sensible people are trying to instil sense in these leaders but, alas, they have

We don't know if Bangladesh will ever get a talented diplomat and visionary politician of international stature like the late SAMS Kibria, or gifted personalities like Prof. Humayun Azad, Professor Yunus, journalist Manik Saha, Shamsur Rahman and many distinguished sons of the soil, but we know that as a nation we are passing through an abysmal darkness.

Hafeezul Alam

On e-mail

The decision of the Indian government not to attend the 13th Saarc summit has disheartened people from all walks of life here in Bangladesh. When all the preparations were complete and Saarc delegates started arriving in Dhaka, the Indian decision surprised not only Bangladesh but also all six other member countries that were looking forward to attending the summit.

"Deteriorating security in Dhaka" and "political developments in Nepal" are the reasons that made India to restrain itself from attending the summit. "Unacceptable" and "unwarranted" are probably the best words to describe such an irrational excuse. With Dhaka going in "yellow alert" days before the summit and with more than 2,000 Rab (Rapid Action Battalion) personnel along with detectives, dog squads and Armed Police Battalion guarding the city, it is hard to understand why India would be concerned about "security" when all other member nations were satisfied.

And as far as Nepal's matter is concerned, it is totally that nation's internal affair and being concerned about such an issue also goes against the Saarc Charter that says, "Bilateral and contentious issues shall be excluded from deliberations". Hence the question comes what is the grudge of Indian government against Saarc? Is it security in Dhaka or development in Nepal? Or is it the SAFTA, that was to be signed in the summit, that requires India to lessen some of its dominance over Saarc nations?

In my short span of a life of 17 years, I do admit that I do not have much knowledge of international politics. But from what I have seen I can say that India has been uncooperative in widening regional cooperation amongst Saarc countries. The bitter rivalry between India and Pakistan has long overshadowed the summit, making it even ineffective to some extent.

Ashfaque Kabir

A-levels, Scholastica

I was very embarrassed to hear that the Saarc summit was postponed. The reasons which India gave were unusual. It was confirmed that the Nepalese King would attend this summit, and massive security measures were taken. The local political developments were not going to influence any international conference.

Tahsin Hyder

Maple Leaf International School, Dhanmondi, Dhaka

They have succeeded in their mission, no matter what cost, to stop the Saarc summit from being held in our country and must be laughing gleefully. We have plunged into a dark abyss, all our hopes have been dashed to pieces. We were looking forward with so much expectation from the summit.

India's decision not to attend the summit is regrettable and the reason put forward is not convincing. All other countries were happy with the arrangements made by the Bangladesh government including the security measures, but India was not happy and gave lame excuses for not attending the summit.

Nur Jahan

Chittagong

Congratulations, cricketers

When the whole nation was waiting for victory, the cricketers lived up to our expectation. Today the nation is proud of them. So congratulations to all the cricketers. I also congratulate our national coach Mr. Whatmore and other concerned people who are playing a role in the development of the game in Bangladesh. I believe that without their contributions, the victory would not have been possible.

I think victory depends on three things: commitment, competency and courage. Our players are showing acquiring these qualities. And that day may not be far away when they will become a force to reckon with in world cricket.

Kamrul Hasan Chowdhury

Bogra, BRAC

Our cricketers don't need short time enthusiasm and overwhelming receptions. They don't need glass, plate, spoon, towels etc as gift. What they need is life long support and encouragement both from the government and from the people.

When the players win, we start calling them "Tigers" and when they lose we term them "Cats"! What a demotion! We should keep in mind that there is victory and at the same time defeat in games.

Cantara Wali Ruhি

Dhaka

paying homage to him in a peaceful manner. I mean, what is the point of creating a violent situation, is it going to help Kibria's soul to rest in peace? We must find his murderers and bring them to justice. The sad part of it is that we are so absorbed within ourselves that we rather like help us in anyway.

Hartal is never the solution to any problem.

Disha Hasan

Montreal, Canada

By calling hartal, the Awami League is only shooting at its own feet. This failed.

I am far away from my beloved country but I am a regular reader of the Bangladeshi newspapers and, believe me, it is indeed painful when I feel that Bangladesh is gradually getting lost in the black hole of uncertainty. We can only pray for a better Bangladesh.

Mohammad Shahid Jamal

Toronto, Canada

Funny, indeed

It's funny how the US didn't bother to ask for any "permission" to search for WMDs in Iraq but now, according to The Daily Star of Feb. 2, "The US is still awaiting a clear-cut decision from the government about whether the FBI would be allowed full access to evidence and witnesses of the Habiganj grenade attack."

It's amazing how little it takes to tear a country apart with nobody's permission and how long it takes to actually make the decision of helping a poor country like ours to investigate an unsolved crime.

Rohena Alam Khan
Winthrop University, SC, US

is not the way to register protest against the tragic death of SAMS Kibria. They should know that a large section of the citizens will keep this in mind during the next election.

Tariq M. Abd'alah

US

Hartals cause serious problems to the poor people. They cannot purchase the required medicines, cannot meet their relations at hospitals and provide them food and other medical supplies.

It is not even possible to get transports and go to the burial ground for burying the deceased.

For a number of lucky rich people, hartal is a holiday. They cannot understand the difficulty of the poor.

Foreign investment in the country gets affected by frequent hartals.

I would request our opposition leaders to understand the difficulties faced by the majority of the people.

Concerned

On e-mail

The country is going through a rough phase at the moment. Bangladesh has a history of chaotic political unrest since independence or creation of Bangladesh.

If political leaders truly care about their countrymen why cannot they act with patience and respect the elected government.

It seems that all of us are in a hurry to share the booties and we do not have the time to be considerate and courteous to others.

In many cases political leaders are found to be embroiled in a dogfight on petty matters.

If political leaders were dedicated to the people's welfare and the country's development, they would not have called a marathon hartal. Sensible people are trying to instil sense in these leaders but, alas, they have political leaders like Prof. Humayun Azad, Professor Yunus, journalist Manik Saha, Shamsur Rahman and many distinguished sons of the soil, but we know that as a nation we are passing through an abysmal darkness.

Hafeezul Alam

On e-mail

The decision of the Indian government not to attend the 13th Saarc summit has disheartened people from all walks of life here in Bangladesh. When all the preparations were complete and Saarc delegates started