Lt. Gen. Gul Hassan was the last commander-in-chief of the Pakistan Army during 1971. He was also the Chief of General Staff of the Pakistan Army during the rule of Gen. Yahya. So, he witnessed from a very close distance the rise and fall of Aiyub Khan, rise of Gen. Yahya, the 1971 war, disintegration of Pakistan, emergence of sovereign Bangladesh, the fall of Yahya and the Bhutto era. His Memoir documents his repercussion of these incidents, his feelings and realisation. The selection of that memoir will surely create interest among Bangalee readers as to how much biased his thoughts were regarding incidents that gave birth to our national identity.

The novel documents the life and history of the indigenous people of Chittagong Hill Tracts during 1961-1971. Not a sequel to the writer's first novel on this subject dealing with the history between 1860 and 1960, this individual novel specially focuses on how the Kapitai barrage has come to affect these peace-loving people. It also dives deep into how the peaceful cohabitation of these people with the Bangalees has grown bitter over the years; why these indigenous people did not participate in the country's Liberation War significantly, and why they have become so rebellious after the independence.
