Novice New Zealand Test batsman leaders Chelsea Hamish Marshall can claim a world record following his 146-run innings in the first Test against Australia here Friday.

When he was bowled between the legs by Shane Warne, as New Zealand were dismissed for 433 on day two of the match, it left Marshall with an average of 127.5 from three Tests after scores of 40 not out on debut in Johannesburg in 2000, and weekend off will inevitably be made a little lighter for Mourinho and his squad by the prospect of kicking back and watching their biggest rivals, Manchester United and Arsenal, in the ignomious position of scrapping to keep their seasons alive.

Midweek setbacks in the Champions League and Chelsea's commanding lead in the Premiership have left the once dominant duo with only one shot at silverware between them.

Of the two, it is Arsenal that look to have the tougher task this weekend as they seek to reach the last world's oldest Cup tour nament for a fifth successive year -an achievement that would match the record set by Manchester United between 1962 and 1966.

Arsenal's chances of proving him wrong have not been helped however by the fact that they will be missing Thierry Henry, who suffered a calf injury against Bayern Munich n midweek

Henry has been quick to identify the underlying reasons for Arsenal's failure to build upon last season's unbeaten romp to the Premiership title, a triumph many confidently predicted would carry over into a successful assault on Europe.
