Asia pushing for own oil market

AFP, Washington

Several Asian countries are pushing ahead with their long held objective of establishing a regional oil market for cheaper supplies, despite warnings such an initiative could backfire.

"If you look at both production and consumption, Asia feels shortchanged," Debnath Shaw, an Indian diplomat, said Monday at a conference organized by the Center for Strategic and International Studies (CSIS), a Washington-based think tank.

Most of the world's supplies are controlled by members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC). The main oil consumers -- North America, Europe and developed Asia -- in turn have formed their own grouping, the International Energy Agency (IEA), to protect their interests.

Being latecomers to the industrialization process, developing countries like India, China and the Southeast Asian economies "find they have no space for themselves" because the so-called oil market "is already divided between the producers and the users," Shaw said.

For example, Asian nations pay an extra 1.50 to 2.00 dollars for every barrel of oil from a refinery in Saudi Arabia compared to North American and European customers, he said.

An Indian diplomatic officer, Shaw is a visiting fellow at CSIS in Washington. He is conducting research on India's energy policies and its relationship to other Asian countries.

In the first ever effort to forge an Asian market for crude and products, regional energy ministers met in India's capital New Delhi in January in an attempt to forge a long-term crude oil supply contract like those that exist in London and New York.

The ministers also mulled strategies for the oil sector that could boost their countries' stability and security.

Participants included Asian consumer nations Japan, China, India and South Korea, as well as top producers Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, the United Arab Emirates and Iran, classified as West Asian rather than Middle East economies at the talks.

However, Alan Hegburg, a senior fellow at CSIS's energy program, cautioned that Asian nations would do more damage to the global oil market and investment if they forged a regional grouping.

Japan economy misfires as unemployment picks up

AFP, Tokyo

Japan's jobless rate rose unexpectedly to a six-month high in February, sparking fresh concerns Tuesday that the world's second-largest economy continues to flirt with recession after only a modest bounce late last year.

The unemployment rate in February rose to 4.7 percent, the highest since 4.8 percent in August and up from 4.5 percent in January, official figures showed. The consensus forecast had been for no change at 4.5 percent.

In another bad set of figures, salaried household spending in February fell 3.8 percent from a year earlier, the Ministry of Internal Affairs and Communications said.

After stumbling through a mild recession in the second and third quarters of 2004, Japan just about managed to post growth in the last three months of the year to give a jobless rate for the year of 4.7 percent after 5.3 percent in 2003.

Recent data too had been more encouraging, with the stockmarket picking up steadily despite record high oil prices and the prospect of higher global interest rates led by the United States.

Accordingly, the latest Japanese figures hit stocks and the yen.
