Former top international referee Anders Frisk, who retired prematurely after he and his family received death threats from Chelsea fans, has ruled out any return to the game.

"I've already entered a new life," Frisk told Tuesday's edition of France-Football magazine.

"From now on. I can be a more normal father of a family. I can be around more than when I was refereeing a match every four days," said the 42-year-old Swede.

"My partner is very happy with my decision even if she never said 'Don't be a referee any more'."

REUTERS, Sydney

Australia vice-captain Adam Gilchrist says he may retire from international cricket after the 2007 World Cup.

The wicketkeeper-batsman told the Inside Cricket Magazine that he wanted to spend more time with his children, three-year-old Harrison and baby Annie.

The 33-year-old said he wanted to keep playing until the 2007 World Cup in the West Indies, but would consider quitting after then. "My battle to survive in cricket these next few years is going to be a mental battle more than a physical one. It seems I'm always questioning myself now as to whether I should be away and how good it would be to be at home," he told the

"It's been that way since I had children. At this stage (his children) Harrison and Annie are at an age where it's all lost on them.

"But by the time they reach a stage where they can identify with what I've done or where I fit in society, I plan on being around a lot more and in a better position to keep a rein on things.

Gilchrist already ranks as one of the world's greatest cricketers and shows no sign of losing form.

He has scored nearly 4,500 Test runs at an average of 55.65, including 15 centuries, and taken 260 catches and 27 stumpings. He has also scored almost 7.000 runs in limited-overs internationals and over 400 dismissals.

PREVIEW (QTRS. LEG 2): JUVENTUS V LIVERPOOL

Will the Old Lady sing?

★CHÂMPS LEAGUE

Czech striker Milan Baros believes his Liverpool side can cope with the loss of their talismanic captain Steven Gerrard and reach the last four of the Champions League.

The England midfielder has been the driving force behind Liverpool's march to the quarter-finals, but the Reds will be without their talented skipper for Wednesday's crunch second leg here against Juventus. Inspirational in Liverpool's 2-1 first leg win last week and a menace whenever he plays, Gerrard has failed to recover from the groin strain he suffered in last Saturday's league defeat at Manchester City. Last week's clash at Anfield was the first time the two sides had met since the 1985 European Cup final at the Heysel stadium, where 39 Juve fans died on the terraces after being trapped against a wall following a charge by Liverpool supporters.

The return leg at the Delle Alpi stadium will be another emotionallycharged affair and fears of reprisals by Juve fans have forced Turin police to beef up security for the match with more than 1,000 officers on duty.

The loss of Gerrard is a major blow to Liverpool's chances of reaching the semi-finals, but Baros is confident the English Premiership side can surprise La Vecchia Signora (The Old Lady).

"When you beat a team like Juventus your confidence grows,' said the Czech Republic international, "Everyone spoke about Juventus and how they would go through easily, but we just got on with what we had to do and played our football
