FOOD ADULTERATION

Children at great risk

PORIMOL PALMA

Children are at particular risk to the harmful side effects of food adulteration, which may lead to serious liver and kidney diseases including various forms of cancer and Hepatitis, experts warn.

The misuse of DDT powder, formalin, indolic and sulfuric acids, as well as toxic colors in food is now well known because of media reports, drives by mobile courts and investigations by Consumer Association of Bangladesh (CAB).

Now experts are warning that the potential threat of such adulteration is most acute among children. Junk food items like cold drinks, bottled fruit juices, ice cream, pastries and biscuits prepared with sugar and chemicals create a light addiction and dependency among children, says Dr Naila Khan, director of the Children Development Centre (CDC) of Shishu Hospital.

Other experts warn that chemicals used in adulteration directly attack the liver of developing children. "Toxic chemicals in food and impure water, even the over mixture of blushing powder in purifying water and adulterated oil are too dangerous for the children when their livers are tender," said Dr Reaz Mobarak, epidemiologist of Dhaka Shishu Hospital.

"These chemical ingredients lead to longstanding and acute liver infection, liver cirrhosis, chronic hepatitis and even liver cancer," improved significantly after they stopped eating junk food, Dr Naila Khan added.

"The children become more irritated and cannot concentrate on their studies due to a lack of nutrition, which directly hinders the brain development," she said.

No formal studies have so far been made on the impact of junk food items, but in a number of cases it was found that the physical and

Agriculture wing's
50 vehicles untraced

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Around one third of the vehicles of different organisations under the agriculture ministry are out of order while the Department of Agricultural Extension (DAE), another wing under the ministry, failed to trace its 50 vehicles.

The agriculture ministry yesterday revealed the fact in a report submitted to the parliamentary standing committee on the ministry.

According to the report, a total of 468 vehicles out of 1,344 under the ministry are now out of order. "They are repairing some vehicles and also planning to sell some of them on auction," the report said referring to the statements of the organisations.

The DAE failed to provide information about 50 vehicles among its total 153. Of the rest, 99 are now out of order, said the report.

Members of the parliamentary body strongly criticised the DAE officials for their failure to provide information about the missing vehicles and asked them to inform the committee in this regard at its next meeting after an enquiry.

Besides, 167 out of 310 vehicles under different development projects of DAE are now out of order, said the report.

The parliamentary body also discussed the agriculture ministry initiatives on soil testing programme across the country. The committee members decided to visit China to gather knowledge about agricultural technology.
