think that we need to worry about any foreign power directly influencing events here. But, by the same token, it would be naïve to assert that public opinion beyond

DHAKA FRIDAY SEPTEMBER 23, 2005

EC powerless before partisan recruitment

With what neutrality does it begin?

T seems that the government is hell-bent on creating all sorts of suspicion and misgiving in the public mind about the ability of the Election Commission (EC) to conduct free and fair elections in the country. The caderisation of the EC at the election officers' level demonstrated by the recent induction, albeit through the PSC, of a large number of Upazila Election Officers (UEO), with umbilical links to the ruling alliance, has only helped to reinforce the suspicion. Our apprehensions and distress are further intensified by the Chief Election Commissioner(CEC)'s express inability to do anything about it.

One has noticed with dismay the gradual politicisation of the administration, of the police and the bureaucracy, the subtleties, in acts that cannot escape even the less than scrutinising eyes, of enhancing the service limits of the high court judges, the motives behind which may be considered less than pious.

Institutions like the Caretaker Government, perhaps the only of its kind in a parliamentary democracy came about due to the relentless struggle and demand of the people to be provided with the opportunity to elect their representatives to the parliament in a free and fair manner. Many endments to the Constitution and existing laws were 1. ...de to ensure that the pretenders of democracy did not trample the sanctity of the hallowed principle of free and fair elections. The EC is one such institution that has the sacred duty to uphold this principle. We feel that the credibility of the EC will be severely dented if those that are appointed as its officials, with the specific task of ensuring free and fair polls are themselves suspect of lacking neutrality and the CEC being unable to do anything about it.

Nobody under the sun is apolitical. But there is a sea of difference between a politically conscious officer and one who has been an active cadre of a political party, whose appointment is designed to tinker with the very process of free election. The EC may seek shelter under technicalities and bask in the assumed detachment of his constitutional post and tout technical trivia to justify an ill-motivated action of the government, but that will not help prevent loss of public confidence in the system.

This reinforces our call for urgent electoral reforms to make the EC really independent with an independent secretariat, budget of its own and without the need to be beholden to any institution of the government or the administration.

It will be well for the CEC to remember that election is not a technical but a political process whose edifice is built on public credibility, transparency and acceptance of the system. Loss of public confidence will cause the edifice to crumble.

Revolting scenes

Undemocratic to the core

E are simply shocked to have witnessed once again police highhandedness against opposition activists, especially their women members during the general strike on Wednesday. The outrageous ways of blocking women activists from practising their democratic rights -- beating them, tugging at their clothes, using batons on them, forcibly pulling them on to the nearby van -- all these only go to show a disregard for minimum decency and

Whilst we condemn the police atrocity we also feel that policemen on duty should not come under attack; but this is occurring due to a disappointment over roadblocks to the opposition's legitimate rights to demonstrate peacefully.

Sadly such a disturbing trend of using highhanded measures against opposition women activists during strike hours is nothing new. We have in the past condemned it and expressed our disgust at the lack of decency on the street. The public deserve to know whether this is the only method the authorities know to break up demonstrations and silence dissent. As far as we know, the government has not imposed any ban on strikes, demonstrations or processions.

In a democratic environment, the opposition parties have a right to demonstrate and agitate in public so long as they do not go violent or disrupt public peace. It was a clear example of denying the opposition space on Wednesday. Why just them, even the journalists were not spared police brutality while discharging their duties.

Inching towards isolation cal violence in Bangladesh at the summit, and has apparently chosen.

to ignore the letter, or at least decided that any issues the US would like to raise with Bangladesh can be discussed on a bilateral bassis and need not be raised in public.

Secretary of State Rice met with the PM while she was in New York to

But it is a point worth noting that this is not the first indication of attend the summit.

HE letter from sixteen prominent US senators and representatives to Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice, urging her to recommend that President Bush raise the issue of political violence in Bangladesh at the UN World Summit in New York, should never have been written. It cannot but hurt the pride of every selfrespecting Bangladeshi.

But it is also fair to say that this extraordinary denunciation of the current government is a direct consequence of the government's inaction in the face of the terrorist atrocities that have marked its four-

The congressmen and women, who include some of the most respected names on both sides of the political aisle, did not mince their words: "The possibility of Bangladesh becoming a failed state and the base of operations for international terrorist organizations should be part of [the summit] asked at this point is whether the letter is of any real political consequence, or if it is simply a tempest in a teacup, that signifies very little.

It should be mentioned that the signatories to the letter are either cans, with little or no influence over the Bush administration and its foreign policy, and that, as it happens, President Bush did not take

The smile

MOHAMMAD BADRUL AHSAN

face smiling at him. She fluttered her evelashes for several times before the smile radiated from her lips to the eyes. She tilted her head and bobbed it down as if she were trying to say something to him.

One lazy afternoon on a summer sion that overcomes young boys coming of age. His cousin told him on the roof of his house that man's fate was to find the woman, who was made from a rib taken from his chest. But he never thought it was woman in a restaurant where he was waiting to eat. His chest swelled with a spurt of joy as if his ribs were glad to find their long lost

E was sitting in a corner, sipping on his drink when his eyes locked in on a dent of the Bank to push the policy imperatives supported by his former boss, President Bush.

There is no question that, in the next three years at least, we are likely to see a more coordinated approach from the US government and the World Bank when it comes to Bangladesh, which accord the remarks made by Dr. Wallich and Dr. Wolfowitz an increased significance.

So when the new head of the Bank

Also interesting to note in the letter is the lawmakers' stated concern for "serious consequences for regional peace and security." This is a more or less unmistakable reference to the long-standing Indian complaint that the Bangladesh government is permitting North-Eastern insurgents to operate from Bangladeshi territory and to New Delhi's fears that the instability in

The question now is what does all this mean, if anything. It certainly seems as though the events of August 17 have been seen a serious strike against the administration in the eyes of the international com-

The administration no longer appears to have any friends of note outside the country who will stand up for it, and the general consensus in the international community seems to be that, at best, the govern-our borders is wholly irrelevant to domestic political considerations. Politics here, among other things, is a confidence game. People like to go with winners -that way they can best garner the spoils of the patronage system that dictates so much in this country. If people get the idea that one party or other has lost favour with the big powers, then that will likely have an go in the run-up to a vote. Not only that, but the flow of foreign investment that this government has been courting so assiduously is likely to be impacted by the poor image of the administration overseas. No one doubts that self-reliance and national pride are a good thing, but at the same time we live in an inter-connected world, and the state of our relations with other countries is a very legitimate focus or comfort in the fact that Bangladesh's relations with friendly effect on how they vote or how far out on a limb they are prepared to

It might matter a great deal less if the government were more popular within its borders. But the corruption and violence of the past four years together with steady rise in prices and fall in the standard of living have combined to bring the ruling alliance into severe disrepute with the general

With its support both inside and outside the country rapidly crumbling, the government needs to give serious thought to how to turn things around. The increasing isolation of the country does none of us any good, and it isn't doing the government any good either.

Zafar Sobhan is Assistant Editor of The Daily Star.

goes on record to suggest that "what A Bangladesh could spill over into the

It might matter a great deal less if the government were more popular within its borders. But the corruption and violence of the past four years together with steady rise in prices and fall in the standard of living have combined to bring the ruling alliance into severe disrepute with the general public. With its support both inside and outside the country rapidly crumbling, the government needs to give serious thought to how to turn things around. The increasing isolation of the country does none of us any good, and it isn't doing the government any good either.

STRAIGHT TALK

impatience with the government's failings among influential members of the international community.

her speech came hard on the heels of the visit to Bangladesh made by the new head of the World Bank. Paul Wolfowitz is better known for his recently completed tenure as US

Deputy Secretary of Defence, during which he achieved notoriety as one of the principal architects of the Iraq war, and there can be little doubt that he will use his new role as presiways, he thought, and took a deep

He looked again and she smiled again, pouting her lips in a luscious manner that could send a thousand men to their deaths. In his long years if he had learned one thing about women, it was that the mystery of the universe was hidden in them. Their eyes held the depth of oceans, their glances dwarfed many mountains. Their lips carried breath.

friend. God works in mysterious swayed her head from side to side

The question that needs to be Democrats or moderate Republi-happened last week [August 17] should be a wake-up call for Bangladesh" it is worth taking seriously.

Last month, the hitherto diplo-The recent reassignment of US matic World Bank Country Director Ambassador Harry K. Thomas after for Bangladesh Christine Wallich a scant two years in Bangladesh gave a much talked about speech at could also indicate changes in the an international workshop on infrarelationship between the government and the Bush administration. structure financing, in which she Indeed, sources tell me that there chastised the government for the corruption in infrastructure develhad long been a difference of opinopment and public procurement. ion between Ambassador Thomas What was noteworthy about her and officials such as Assistant US Secretary of State for South Asia speech was that for the first time IDr. Wallich went significantly beyond Christine Rocca on the approach to her more muted and delicate critibe taken with respect to the Banglacisms of governance failure of the desh government's inaction in the face of terrorism and political vio-It is perhaps no coincidence that

It is possible that the return of Ambassador Thomas to Washington heralds the beginning of a new get tough policy on the government, and that the Bush administration will henceforth demand a more active role in ensuring that Bangladesh not become (to quote the letter) "a base of operations for international terrorist organiza-

to the rhythm of music playing inside the room. He didn't know what to do or say. For a while he thought he should walk up to her

Just then a second thought crossed his mind. The heart of a woman has the strength of a dense it through from end to end. Who was she and why she should take and start a conversation bordering Indian states. They weren'ttalking about Myanmar.

India has long been on record expressing its alarm at the proliferation of religious extremism in Bangladesh and the government's apparent inability or unwillingness to confront it. The most complete statement of Indian displeasure with the current government was delivered by Indian Foreign Secretary Shyam Saran on the heels of India's decision not to attend the 13th Saarc summit that was scheduled to be held in Dhaka in February. Since then, the bilateral relationship has improved considerably, with Indian Foreign Minister Natwar Singh's recent official visit to Bangladesh the high point of the renewed thaw. However, the serial bomb blasts of August 17 have rekindled concern that the situation ments made by senior cabinet members implicating India in the attacks have infuriated New Delhi (the successful recently concluded water talks notwithstanding).

upper lip, blowing air into the bangs of hair hanging over her forehead. When he looked again, she smacked her lips as if to announce that she wasn't getting longer, wondering how a crowd could become the loneliest place grew up unnoticed and ignored,

But he wished to think a little enough attention from him.

forest. One could never claim to see on earth, remembering how he law and order within the country in the face of terrorist atrocity, and at worst, that the government, or elements within the government, are tied to the extremists, which is why they have been able to act with virtual impunity. Either way, it seems as though the ment is utterly unable to maintain patience of the international community may finally be running very thin indeed.

The next question is whether it matters. Does it make a difference if the US or the EU or anyone else for that matter is running out of patience with the current govern-

Let us not lose sight of the fact that, for all its shortcomings, the alliance government has been democratically elected, and that whether its performance in office merits re-election should be a matter solely for the people of this country to determine, and no one

In addition, I am not one for conspiracy theories, and I do not face now, her head lowered in a gaze fixed on the table. Glory of were wax, women were fire. If men were steel, women were magnet. If men were flies, women were flames. Flesh to flesh, yet the mystery of the universe transpired between them. It was his turn now, to meet his woman, raise a family, wombs of women who came as mothers, who came as wives. It and perpetuate that mystery in the cycle of life and death.

For a long time the woman didn't ### craving for attention in a house full interest in him? He tried to remem-of loved ones. Loneliness arouses a CROSS TALK The woman was pulling a long face now, her head lowered in a gaze fixed on the table. Glory of creation! He thought again. If men were wax, women were fire. If men were steel, women were magnet. If men were flies, women were flames. Flesh to flesh, yet the mystery of the universe transpired between them. It was his turn now, to meet his woman, raise a family, and perpetuate that mystery in the cycle of life and death.

Women are the glory of creation, he said to himself, and returned her nectar of fruits, breath reeking with smile, Allah be praised. She fragrance of rose. Their voice lilted responded to him by closing her the music of flutes, laughter eyes like a brooding cat, when it's resounded shattering glasses. Their petted on the head. His nervous smile shone like a beaming sun, heart jumped like a frog and he their tears flowed like surging tides. thanked holy heavens for this lucky Dark clouds floated in their hairs, a thousand galaxies roamed their minds. When they speak, look, sing, day, he was burning with the pas-

She waived at the waiter and said something to him, and then looked straight in the direction of where he was sitting. For a moment he going to be like this, finding his thought a sharp knife had just gone through his heart, realizing how he was unprepared to look a woman in the eye. She smiled again, and smile, weep, love and hate, nature sets in motion to destroy and creber if he had met her before. Could she be one of his distant relatives, whom he hadn't seen since she was a kid? It happened to one of his friends who made a pass at a steaming beauty in a shopping mall, and came home to find that the girl was his niece from a distant cousin.

Relationship defies the law of mathematics when multiplications diminish familiarity and create strangers amongst kith and kin. He grew up in the solitude of an immense house, which swarmed with people, relatives, visitors, and servants until they all vanished, one by one, in the stretch of life, to get married, to find jobs, to raise families. She was now looking bored, her lower lip curved over the terrible hunger, seething in the veins with a raging void, hurting like a napalm bomb that sucis out the air before burning everything

A man is aroused when he is either full or empty. It comes to him after a good meal, when he is wined and dined, when he is content and life feels like a breeze in the spring. But it also comes to him in the midst of worries, when he is afraid and anxious, when he feels desolate, abandoned and challenged. Players feel it before a game, soldiers feel it before they go to war, and vagabonds feel it every time they realise that they have nothing left to lose.

The woman was pulling a long raise her eyes and quietly ate the food served to her. Meanwhile, the waiter had also laid out his lunch when he waited for her to lift her face and look at him again. Suddenly he felt annoyed lest she thought he would like to become a plaything to her! Then he knew that women were unpredictable. What they showed wasn't always what they meant. Perhaps it was her revenge for the time he spent thinking and not paying attention to her. It occurred to him that this was part of that same mystery, which was chasing its logical conclusion in the fatal attraction between man and woman. Life was nothing but a relay race, passing from creation! He thought again. If men was destiny that made things happen, whereas love, sex, and marriage were mere excuses to bring two bodies into predetermined union. His heart was about to explode when she finally raised her head and looked towards him. But this time she wasn't making any eye contact with him, her face heavy as the laden sky before monsoon rain. He smiled at her, but she looked away, and it amused him to think that the wrath of a woman could make her silly. He smiled again, she looked away again, her eyes going over his head as if she was looking for someone, who was sitting behind him.

The blood was beginning to boil inside him. Why did he have to meet this woman inside this restaurant where he had come for no other business but to eat one meal? Why did she have to smile at him, and why did he have to believe that she was smiling at him on this day which was not different from any other day?

The ribs in his chest started to ache as if they felt cheated by one of them. Before he knew what happened, she sprang up on her feet and ran towards the door. By the time he turned around to look where she was going, she had disappeared into the belly of a car which sped away in the blink of an eye and vanished into the traffic on the road.

father to son conceived in the Mohammad Badrul Ahsan is a banker,

Although a case has been registered in this regard and the law will "take its own course," it is common knowledge

An apology

SHAMSHER CHOWDHURY

do not know whether any one within the government or from civil society has vet regretted or apologised to Mrs. Sarbajit Chakrabarty, wife of the Deputy High Commissioner of India in Bangladesh, for the incident that took place at the city's Bashundhara complex.

I for one would like to do so on behalf of myself. Surely I would even go to the extent of apologising on behalf of the entire nation, but I am hesitating since this may irk the relevant authorities in our government. Such incidents are indeed far from desirable. It is twice unfortunate when it happens involving a lady, whether belonging to the diplomatic community or from civil society.

It is not a question as to who triggered off what, the very first action of the relevant governmental authority should have been to tender an apology right away. An apology on behalf of the complex owners would also be a highly welcome gesture, and would go a long way in resolving this most undesirable debacle causing tensions between our neighbour

I do not hold any kind of brief for the Indian High Commission in Bangladesh, but certainly as a conscious citizen of this country I believe that the incident has only added to the list of failures in providing adequate security to diplomats and their families. The people of the diplomatic community are yet to overcome the horror of the bomb blast in Sylhet in which the British High Commissioner narrowly escaped death.

that this course is often too long. Our administration has been known to have followed this path in many such similar cases of high sensitivity only to create a visibility factor and buy time so that public memory, which is often notoriously short, forgets the issue altogether and the whole thing becomes a mere matter of the past. While the security of the entire developed countries of the world, country is threatened by terrorist the neo-rich of our country do acts and acute law and order situa tion, surely an incident of this nature further complicates matters. The administration is continually harping on how our nation's image is being tarnished at home and abroad by a vested quarter, but with incidents like this no vested quarter will be required to damage our image here or over-

Following the reports in local dailies, something else has confirmed my suspicion that, unlike suffer from acute arrogance. I am convinced that extraordinary wealth and arrogance at least here in this country go hand in hand. It baffles me as to how poorly our people behave in given situations. It is but too well known that the whole world today is on a downward swing, but we seem to be at the bottom of it all. Some stern action should be taken a gainst individuals involved in the incident. It must not be pushed under the carpet and forgotten.

memory of the time when none other than the High Commissioner of India in Bangladesh, Mr. Samar Sen, was fired upon and narrowly escaped death sometime during The administration may take shelter under the excuse that an incident of this kind is too isolated and relates to some erratic behaviour of some individual/s and hence may underplay the importance of the incident. But taking that stance would be a blunder. The matter should be most seria

This incident has also revived our ously investigated and the culprits should be brought to justice. We have often experienced that whenever an individual of wealth and influence in the society is involved the matter is either hushed up or an individual of lesser consequence is made a scape-goat. It must not happen in this case.

> It may appear far-fetched, but there is no denying of the factthat an incident like this is not helping in improving the already existing strained relationship between us and our neighbour, although it must be said that the incidentwas purely accidental caused by the houghtless behaviour of a few.

We should also take a lesson from the incident. Of late there has been too many incidents in which security personnel have been alleged to be highly nonprofessional and even involved in thefts and robberies within the complex, the safety and security of which were entrusted to them. The administration and the owners of large enterprises and business houses should properly check out both their professional capabilities and integrity before they are employed. Looking back at the incident, I still wonder how come the guards and other individuals involved in the incident let mat-

Although a case has been registered in this regard and the law will "take its own course," it is common knowledge that this course is often too long. Our administration has been known to have followed this path in many such similar cases of high sensitivity only to create a visibility factor and buy time so that public memory, which is often notoriously short, forgets the issue altogether and the whole thing becomes a mere matter of the past. A total reliance on that line will however be absolutely unwise for the administration in this instance. In this case, swift and sincere diplomatic moves by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs is also called for. We seem to have totally forgotten that honesty of purpose and humility are all time virtues anywhere in any society through eternity.

The author is a freelance contributor to The Daily