

Regional, bilateral trade pacts to mushroom if WTO talks fail

Business leaders say

AFP, Singapore

Regional and bilateral agreements will proliferate further and protectionist tendencies are likely to increase if the World Trade Organisation (WTO) talks in Hong Kong fail, business leaders and analysts say.

While regional and bilateral trade agreements (RTAs and FTAs) will help in tearing down barriers, they could also divide the world into trading blocks and lead to more confusion because of differing rules and standards, they added.

"Without an agreement (in Hong Kong), we will see increased protectionism... I am a strong believer in multilateralism," former Hong Kong governor Chris Patten said in a public lecture in Singapore last month.

The APEC Business Advisory Council (ABAC), a group of business leaders advising the Asia-

Pacific Economic Cooperation (APEC) forum, said in a recent report the benefits of regional and bilateral trade agreements were limited.

"If the WTO fails to achieve a successful conclusion to the Doha Development Round next year, the focus of trade liberalisation will turn in earnest to the negotiation of RTAs/FTAs," it said.

"While welcoming the opening of markets resulting from RTAs/FTAs, ABAC is concerned that the proliferation of many separate agreements with different terms and rules could result in trade diversion and increased costs and complexity of doing business in the region."

It urged the 21 Pacific Rim nations and territories belonging to APEC to have a "Plan B" as a fallback if the WTO process fails -- that is, work towards establishing an Asia Pacific free-trade accord.
