BCL NATIONAL COUNCIL

Non-students vie for central posts

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

At least two-thirds of the candidates for the Bangladesh Chhatra League (BCL) central committee office-bearers to be elected by the April 3-4 national council are near 40 in age and left behind their student life long ago.

The student wing of Awami League (AL) has held only three national councils in the last 12 years, saturating itself with a huge number of aged and non-student 'student leaders', sources said. As a result, there is now a severe leadership crisis at all levels, from the centre down to the grassroots units, of the country's leading student body.

Sources said since the formation of the present BCL central committee four years back, no more than 30 out of its 201 members have remained active in student politics to date.

They also said most of some 50 'student leaders' vying for the top five powerful posts—president, vice president, general secretary, joint secretary and organising secretary—are not regular students any more and aged between 30 and 40 years.

Many of them, who were busy with moneymaking and other personal or professional affairs, have now returned to the organisation's pavilion ahead of the council. They are lobbying BCL units, leaders and workers, and AL offices and leaders, and even knocking at the party chief's residence, Sudha Sadan, day and night for securing seats on the new central body.

Senior AL leaders said they may consider matured leaders as the president and the general secretary of the next BCL central committee, but the remaining posts will go to young regular students. They will discuss the matter with AL President Sheikh Hasina tomorrow and finalise the BCL top leadership criteria, party sources said.

Hasina is scheduled to return from the USA today after treatment of hearing ailments and inaugurate the two-year-late national council

Political blame game must end to sustain democracy

Observe participants in BBC debate

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Bangladesh needs to overcome political deadlock and the culture of blaming each other in politics, and to ensure accountability of the government to sustain democracy, participants in a BBC-sponsored debate observed yesterday.

The country is now plagued with corruption and lack of tolerance. If democracy does not succeed in the country, there might be attempts to plant it from outside, they noted. The participants in the debate on "Bangladesh -- Can Democracy Deliver?" said mismanagement in the successive governments made the administration slow and dysfunctional.

Two panels of discussants in Dhaka and London simultaneously participated in the debate through satellite.

Force shutdown at Bangkok's key retail district

Thousands of protesters trying to oust Thailand's Prime Minister Thaksin Shinawatra shut down one of Bangkok's key commercial centres yesterday, causing massive traffic jams, as they stepped up their campaign four days before troubled elections.

Police diverted traffic around one
