

Doorway to a Brighter Future

Private education has become big business. With only a handful of public universities offering limited seats, private universities are the only alternative (besides going abroad) for a growing number of young people who can afford it. Parents and guardians find themselves spending a large chunk of their income on tuition fees. But is this investment, that may amount to several lakh taka, really worth it?

ELITA KARIM