Bangladeshis living abroad tend to visit amadergaan.com to update themselves on various issues, especially music and its development in Bangladesh," says Faysal. "Besides the fact that we post the latest news regarding, album releases, concerts and other tit bits about musicians, the members also make it a point to voice out their opinions openly in the forums. They respond to albums, a certain piece of music they have heard, a movie they have watched or even a book they have read."

According to Rubayya Noor Nabila, the Director of Pubic Relations Officer of the organisation, the .Loud project was launched to actually bring all the Bangladeshi musicians closer to the internet. "There are thousand of Bangladeshis across the globe who want to know more about musicians here in Bangladesh," says Nabila. "In foreign countries, musicians have their own databases online, which makes it easier for everyone around the world to get to know more about them. Since we have a dedicated server of our own, we thought of providing the domain and the space to the musicians so that they can have some sort of an identity online for all to see all over the world." Links of these musicians and artistes can be found on the official website of amadergaan.com.

Faizul Khan Tanim, the Director of News and Media of AmaderGaan, says that technical support will also be given to the musicians. "There are some who might not be able to update the site because of lack of technical knowledge or time," he explains. "In this case, the artistes would just have to let us know the information they want to update so that our technical support can take care of it."

AmaderGaan has definitely taken an encouraging step for the musicians, especially the young musicians and music lovers in Bangladesh to become more aware and accepted globally.
