Separatist rebels in India's restive northeastern state of Assam killed 48 people, mostly labourers and traders, in a series of coordinated overnight attacks, police said yesterday.

Police said heavily armed United Liberation Front of Assam (ULFA) guerrillas gunned down at least 12 people in one remote village in Tinsukia.

Guerrillas wearing army uniforms bound the hands of 13 kiln workers and fishermen and killed them in a pre-dawn raid Saturday in Tinsukia district, 590km east of Assam's main city of Guwahati, officials said.

"The militants tied the hands of the people and shot them dead from close range with automatic weapons ... raining bullets on them," Tinsukia district magistrate Absar Hazarika told AFP by telephone.

Saturday's killings near Ghoromori Chapor village came hours after rebels carried out nine attacks in the oil- and tea-rich state late Friday that left 29 people dead.

"The massacre took place in an inaccessible area and the victims are mostly brick kiln workers and milk sellers," a senior intelligence officer told Reuters in Guwahati, the state's main city.

The rebels also gunned down eight traders in a crowded market in Tinsukia's Doordumura town, police said, adding another nine people were killed in separate attacks in the district.

A further 13 labourers, including a woman, were killed in two separate strikes in Dibrugarh district.

"There were about 10 militants in each group and they attacked the labourers when they were preparing their dinner," VK Ramisetty, a senior police official in Dibrugarh, said.

Another person was killed when militants triggered a blast in Sivasagar district.

"Witnesses told police that attackers came with their faces covered, and they tied the hands and legs of the victims before they were shot dead," a police officer,

Poll results to be meaningless due to boycott
Says EIU

UNB, Dhaka

The UK-based Economist Intelligence Unit (EIU) has said the decision by several opposition parties to boycott the January 22 polls suggests the result will be meaningless and the political outlook is therefore highly uncertain.

The EIU in its latest report on Bangladesh said it is possible that, as in 1996, another election will be held following constitutional reform to assuage opposition concerns about bias in the present system.

"Some form of military intervention is also possible," it said, adding two predictions can be made with reasonable confidence, however: the institution of a caretaker government is unlikely to survive the crisis, and the transition to the next government will involve more violence.

The report said main opposition Awami League (AL) leader Sheikh Hasina fulfilled a longstanding threat on January 3 by announcing that her party would boycott the

FBCCI for emergency if deadlock continues

Other business bodies yet to endorse call

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The country's apex trade body yesterday urged the caretaker government to declare a state of emergency if it fails to persuade the two major political parties to reach a consensus within 24 hours to break the deadlock over the upcoming election.

But top business leaders said they are yet to endorse the call of the Federation of Bangladesh Chambers of Commerce and Industry (FBCCI) for declaring a state of emergency to save the country from political confrontation.

Criticising the chief adviser for failing to maintain neutrality, the FBCCI leaders said the chief adviser alone is responsible for the political impasse as he did not implement the package proposal.

There is no way but to declare emergency to save the country from chaos, confusion and confrontation, the FBCCI leaders said at a press briefing in the capital after a board meeting of the trade body.

They also said before declaring an emergency the chief adviser can seek the Supreme Court's reference for taking more time to hold the national election with participation of all parties.

"We businessmen want an election where all political parties take part, including the two major parties," said Mohammad Ali,

JP urges army, law enforcers not to carry out CA's orders

Jatiya Party (JP-Ershad) yesterday urged the law-enforcement agencies and the armed forces not to carry out orders of President and Chief Adviser (CA) Iajuddin Ahmed that goes against the people.

Terming the present agitation against the CA 'national movement', the JP leaders also vowed to resist the January 22 polls at any cost.

"We are sure that the armed forces and other law enforcers would not turn against the people," JP Presidium Member Kazi Zafar Ahmed said at a press briefing at the Banani party office.

"If needed we will sacrifice our blood but we will not allow hold any election under the jurisdiction of partisan CA Iajuddin Ahmed," he said adding that those who dream of holding the election on January 22 and therefore go to power, are pipe-dreaming.

The JP leaders demanded immediate resignation of the CA and declaration of fresh poll schedule. They also asked the party activists to observe the countrywide blockade with a tough mood.

The time of the blockade will be extended if needed, they added.

Republicans join Democrats in opposing more US troops for Iraq

AP, Washington

President Bush's plan to send more troops to Iraq is running into trouble on Capitol Hill, with Republicans joining Democrats in raising eyebrows before the president even has a chance to make his case.

Next week Bush will unveil a new Iraq strategy that entails political, military and economic steps to win the war. The military solution, which has attracted the most attention and scepticism from Congress, is expected to include an increase in US troops, possibly 9,000 additional troops deployed to Baghdad alone.

Bush also reshuffled his military commanders, taping fresh faces to lead the war effort.

House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, D-California and Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nevada, shot down the suggestion of more troops within a day of gaining control of Congress.

"We are well past the point of more troops for Iraq," the two wrote in a letter to Bush. Instead, Pelosi and Reid urged Bush to begin pulling troops out in four to six months.

Bush told more than a dozen senators Friday that he would settle on the option only if the Iraqi government offered certain guarantees, according to senators who attended the meeting.

While lawmakers said they were willing to wait and see the entirety of Bush's plan before dismissing it entirely, members including some Republicans said they remained deeply sceptical about sending more troops.

"My conclusion was that it would be a mistake to send more troops to Baghdad. I think the sectarian violence there requires a political, not a military, solution," said Sen Susan Collins, R-Maine, who had not had a chance yet to meet with the president.

Rep Heather Wilson, R-New Mexico, an Air Force veteran and member of the House Intelligence Committee, said she would not support increasing troop levels "to do for the Iraqis what the Iraqis will not do for themselves."

"I also have not seen a clarity of mission, and I think that's the greatest weakness that we have right now," Wilson said. "We're talking about goals in lofty terms that are not vital American national interests. American troops should only go in harm's way to protect America's vital interests."

Even Sen John McCain, a Republican who advocates sending more troops in Iraq, said he wouldn't support sending in the additional forces unless the number was adequate enough to finally tamp down the violence.

"I need to know if it's enough or not," McCain said.

McCain, R-Arizona, and Sen Joseph Lieberman, I-Connecticut, said they think at a minimum another three to five brigades should be sent to Baghdad and one more to Anbar province. About 3,500 troops are in a brigade. About 140,000 US troops are in Iraq now.

Sen Ben Nelson, who was among the small group of senators who met with the president Friday, said he felt Bush was aware of the high stakes and knew he would have to sell any plan to the American public. Bush suggested to the senators there would be "the expectation of the Iraqis carrying out their part of the deal or else," said Nelson, D-Nebraska.

But Nelson said he and others remained reluctant to endorse any plan that would further stretch the military.

"I don't think there was anything partisan about the scepticism," he said.

Briefings with lawmakers were expected to continue through next week, culminating in a meeting with bipartisan leadership Wednesday, according to lawmakers and aides.

Suicide bombing kills 15 in Lankan bus

AFP, Colombo

A suspected female suicide bomber set off a powerful blast inside a bus in southern Sri Lanka on Saturday, killing 15 passengers and wounding 40 in the second bus attack in two days, police said.

Suspicion pointed to a woman suicide bomber who is believed to have detonated explosives she carried onboard the crowded vehicle, police said.

"We suspect it was a suicide bombing," police inspector Upul Ariaratne said from his regional headquarters at Ambalangoda, 85km south of Colombo, close to where the bus was blown up.

"We have taken 15 bodies to hospital and another 40 were admitted to two hospitals."

The attack followed a bus blast late Friday when six passengers were killed and another 70 wounded near Colombo.

Authorities blamed both attacks on the rebel Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE), which is fighting for an independent Tamil homeland.

In Saturday's blast, 60 passengers were in the bus which was driving along the tourist strip between Ambalangoda and Hikkaduwa when the bomb went off.

The bus was travelling from the capital Colombo to Matara, a distance of 160 kilometres (100 miles).

The route was immediately cordoned off by heavily armed troops. There were no reports of other vehicles or tourists getting caught up in the blast.

In Friday's blast, a two-kilogram (4.4-pound) time bomb was fixed to
