Badal Rahman: A clarion call for children's entertainment

ERSHAD KAMOL

THERE are few sources of entertainment for children in Bangladesh. Badal Rahman stands apart as the name behind the first Bangladeshi movie on children, titled Emili-er Goyenda Bahini.

Badal continues to make children's films and TV plays. Talking about his latest endeavour, Badal asserts that he is making a TV serial for Channel 1 named Abak Pancher Kando, which features the adventures of four children and a dog. The TV serial is an adaptation of British children's author Enid Mary Blyton's popular series Famous Five.

Badal says, "I'll present Blyton's adventure series in the Bangladeshi context. Four kids and a dog in Abak Pancher Kando will unveil several stories of corruption."

How does he feel working in tandem with child actors? "It's both entertaining and challenging," continues Badal, "Children have an intrinsic flair for acting. I enjoy working with them. But it's really difficult to control the kids during shooting."

Badal has been working with child actors since he was a BTV producer (1968-76). He says, "As a BTV producer I used to make programmes slanted to entertain children. Selim Al Deen and Al Mansur were my assistants who used to do the scripting."

In 1973 Badal was awarded a scholarship on filmmaking (1973-76) in Pune, India. Before going there Badal decided to make Emili-er Goyenda Bahini. He said, "Al Mansur gave a translation of German children's author Erich Kästner's (1899-1974) novel Emil and the Detectives (1929) titled Emili-er Goyenda Bahini. During my stay in Pune I got chance to watch children's film classics from around the world. In those days I began scripting of Emili-er Goyenda Bahini. Returning to Bangladesh I submitted the script for a government grant in 1978."

After the release of the movie in 1981, it got many national awards including best movie of the year. Badal got two awards-- best director and editor. Golam Mostafa and child actor Tiptip got the best actor awards. Alam Khan won an award for the best music composer of the year."

After the huge success of the movie, Badal made two more children's movies-- Kanthal Burir Bagan and Chhana O Muktiuddha. Both of the movies were funded by Bangladesh Shishu Academy. However, Chhana O Muktiuddha is yet to be released.

The question is why not more films? Badal says, "Emili-er Goyenda Bahini is considered one of the best movies in Bangladesh. But, it's not a box office hit amongst so many commercial movies. It ran only in a few theatres simultaneously. That's why I believe the producers did not approach me. Moreover, the quality of the movie industry has declined from the 1980s. As a result I shifted to making documentaries."

So far Badal has made over 50 documentaries for government and non-government organisations. Of these Self Portrait: Bangladesh and It's for Your Asking, basically are promotional films on Bangladesh and its export commodities, which were screened abroad.

Badal thinks that the need of the hour is a greater output of children's movies. Towards this end he seeks greater government patronage.

'If...': Book with an anti-war message

FAYZA HAQ

A book with a moving message, If written by Syed Mohsin, was recently launched at the Dhaka Club. Although a thin book of less than a 100 pages it conveyed the message of the destruction, pain and confusion of wars and the suffering that comes with the infliction of AIDS. Culture activists like Rabiul Husian, Rafiq Azad, Faiz Ahmed and Hyder Husyn were full of praise for the literary work.

Written by an expatriate, If covers a wide span of area ranging from "Sylhet to Ontario", as Faiz Ahmed puts it. The plot is poignant and to the point. One has empathy for the central figure, James, who is a war child and ends up dying with AIDS, longing for his actual mother in Bangladesh. The author hopes to ultimately make a film from the book, given the chance, with visual images elaborating on emotions and scenes.

The book is in Bangla, interspersed with names of people and places in English and is printed in Banglabazar, with the dust-jacket done by the author himself. The picaresque novel is based on actuality and elaborated with fiction. The plot veers backwards and forwards in time, and makes for interesting reading. If revised, said the cultural experts, this commercial novel could gain more depth. However, the author says, he wants the message to be brief but to the point.

With passion for the stage and a love for movies, Mohsin has written as a youth but this is his first attempt in serious writing as an adult. A Vancouver-based garment manufacturer by profession, the author -- who was disillusioned by his earlier political role in Bangladesh as an MP-- wishes to donate the sale proceeds of the book for AIDS victims in Bangladesh.

Mohsin says, "I met the protagonist, James Watson, 32, in Vancouver in 2003. A war victim of 1971, he was found on the streets of Bangladesh, and adopted by someone in Canada. For some reason he became alienated from society and his foster family. He ultimately died with AIDS, pining for his Bangladeshi mother."

Returning home, he mulled over writing on this poignant anti-war subject, taking six months to complete the book. He didn't touch the war scene in 64 pages, but was lucky to get Genius in Banglabazar to print in record time, before he moved off to Vancouver once again. He hopes to be back by Ekushey Mela in February this year to make a record sale of his book.

Mohsin's central message is that if the war didn't take place, the protagonist wouldn't perhaps have been so confused and alienated, nor an AIDS victim. "There is always a logic behind a war, but a war shouldn't have such adverse effect on a normal person's life e.g. the hero didn't have to die in the flower of his manhood. I made up characters with fictitious names, as my imagination took wing. The elements of tears are blended with bits and pieces of joy." The author feels that people in this day and age can discuss and work out their problems -- without resorting to violent and gruesome wars.

Oprah, the victim of US$1.5 million blackmail scheme

Oprah Winfrey was the target of an extortion plot by an Atlanta man who claimed to have damaging audio tapes he would release if he wasn't paid off, federal court charges allege.

The man, Keifer Bonvillain, is accused of illegally recording phone conversations he had with a Winfrey employee about her and her business. According to the charges, he then asked for US $1.5 million from a second person, described as a Winfrey "business associate," to destroy the tapes and his notes.

The charges go on to say that Bonvillain threatened to sell the information to the tabloids or write a book about them.

Winfrey is not identified in the complaint, but instead the documents refer to an "Individual A," who is "a public figure and the owner of a Chicago-based company." The Chicago Sun-Times and Chicago Tribune on Saturday identified "Individual A" as Winfrey, whose Harpo Studios is based in Chicago.

Bonvillain's attorney, Kent Carlson, told the Tribune and Sun-Times he could neither confirm nor deny details in the complaint.
