

Gazi belongs to Russel

SPORTS REPORTER

Sheikh Russel Krira Chakra officially announced Wajed Gazi as their coach for the B. League – the inaugural Professional Football – League which kicks off in mid-February.

Veteran coach Gazi was in double minds as his former club Brothers Union wanted him to stay after he had committed to Russel.

The Brothers management hoped that the two clubs would be able to reach an understanding and keep him at Gopibagh. But Gazi, who reportedly received advance payment from Russel for the treatment of his ailing son, finally showed his loyalty to Russel.

Gazi and his assistant coach Zahidur Rahman Milon, a former goalkeeper, both signed their agreements with Russel yesterday.

As a backup Brothers had already talked with former Indian national coach Syed Nayeemuddin, who also was at the helm of the Oranges three years back. It is expected that the Premier League winners of the last two seasons will now focus fully on bringing Nayeemuddin.

Ganguly said he would like to regain his opening slot in batting order but would go with whatever the team decides.

"It is for the team management to decide but if you see my record, I have played almost 250 matches as an opener. If they (team management) were to ask me I would like to open but as I said I am ready to play at any position for the country," he told 'Aaj Tak' in an interview.

When asked about the loss in South Africa, Ganguly said, "we should have drawn the series at least but we lost it, but every member of the team is responsible for the same (for the defeat). It is not the captain or the coach alone."

line decisions. Why can't it be applied to other dismissals as well," Inzamam said in a television interview after the defeat.

Pakistan were at the rough end of some poor umpiring decisions, but Inzamam did not blame it for the defeat.

"The ICC Code of Conduct does not allow me to say anything on this. But everyone saw what happened," he said.

Inzamam urged the ICC to allow the umpires to seek the assistance of modern technology while reaching at a conclusion on doubtful decisions.

"Modern technology can be used by umpires to rule on any close decisions including caught behind or leg before ones," he added.

The ICC experimented with the option of allowing batting teams to appeal against any disputed decision to the third umpire last year in one tournament, but soon afterwards dropped the idea.

Inzamam said that his team would come back strongly in the series, strengthened with the return of in-form batsman Mohammad Yousuf and fast bowlers Shoaib Akhtar and Umar Gul in the second Test starting on January 19.

All the three players missed the first Test while all-rounders Abdul Razzaq and Shoaib Malik missed the series due to fitness problems.

Win relieves press

Cricket

AFP, London

A sense of relief was palpable in the British press after England finally won its first match during its ongoing tour of Australia, a one-day triumph over New Zealand, leading one newspaper here on Wednesday to call it the "headline you thought you'd never see".

That was how The Sun tabloid, Britain's best-selling newspaper, titled its article describing the jittery affair in Hobart on Tuesday that saw England beat the Kiwis' modest total of 205, thereby securing their first victory since landing in Australia in early November.

The three-wicket win with just a ball to spare followed a disastrous Test series for England, who arrived in Australia as holders of the Ashes for the first time in 20 years, only to lose all five matches in the series, the first whitewash since 1920-21.

"England's win ... over New Zealand on the island of Tasmania yesterday (Tuesday) sent a surge of relief through the dressing room," the tabloid's match report read.

"A win is a win and the spectre of going through the entire tour without putting a W in the result column has been removed."

The victory, led by Andrew Flintoff's 72 not out, was tempered in the press, however, by the news that captain Michael Vaughan strained his left hamstring in his second game back from a long absence after knee surgery.

"Break open the bubbly, England have won a game of cricket Down Under!" the Daily Mirror's match report said, under the headline, "Good News ... Bad News".

"But England's obvious joy was spoiled when the very same ice used to chill the champagne was being applied to Michael Vaughan's strained left hamstring."

As the paper also noted, "When England set off from Heathrow (London's main airport) on November 3 they could not have imagined how long it would take to get there, but 72 days into their journey the dust in the win column can finally be blown away and a mark chalked up."

The Guardian daily echoed those sentiments, writing: "England had arrived in Australia on bonfire night as proud holders of the Ashes and since then there had been a bonfire of the vanities, a veritable conflagration, with Flintoff, as a beleaguered stand-in captain, one of those most badly singed."

The Daily Express, meanwhile, wrote that the path to the win was unimportant: "Yes, England's first victory of a winter of torment Down Under was a nervous and scrappy affair."

"Yes, they almost threw it away chasing a low total. But they did it. They stumbled over the line. They won."

"And that was all that mattered to a team that were in danger of becoming a music-hall joke. One precious word—victory."

With 17 balls to go, a win seemed a formality, but New Zealand clawed their way back, leaving England needing four off the last over and tail-end batsman Jon Lewis on strike against part-time seamer Craig McMillan.

Lewis scored a single from the second ball of the over, before Flintoff collected two off the next delivery and then hit the winning runs with a straight drive from the penultimate ball of the match.

Following the win, British bookmaker William Hill cut England's odds of winning the triangular series from 16/1 to 13/2.

But Hills had world champions Australia 1/8 favourites to take the tournament and 4/7 to win all four of their group matches against England.

he was out for quite a few months," said Bari, referring to the injury-related absence of Navedul Hasan, who missed several matches in 2006 because of a groin injury he sustained while playing for Sussex.

The former Test cricketer, however, hoped that the team management would take the right decision in Gul's case. "I hope better sense prevails because with the World Cup just round the corner we cannot afford to make any mistakes," he said.

Meanwhile, a PCB spokesman played down any such fears saying that all of Pakistan's leading bowlers would be available for the second Test. "We have received positive reports on our bowling attack and we expect that Pakistan would take the field in Port Elizabeth with their first choice bowlers," he said.

He added that fast bowler Shoaib Akhtar has also been declared match fit and is all set to bowl in the second Test.

Murali, Vaas given rest

Sri Lanka have rested senior bowlers Muttiah Muralidaran and Chaminda Vaas for a four-match ODI series against India in February.

The selectors offered the pair, the most successful bowlers in Sri Lanka's one-day international history, an opportunity to rest because both have niggling injuries.

Sri Lanka have recalled left-arm fast bowler Nuwan Zoysa, leg-spinning all rounder Upul Chandana, middle-order batsman Russel Arnold and medium pace bowler Nuwan Kulasekera to a 15-man squad for the series.

Batsman Chamara Kalpugedera has been axed following the New Zealand tour but will remain on standby in case one of the eight specialist batsmen gets injured.

Seam bowlers Ruchira Perera and Akalanka Ganegama were also dropped after the drawn series with the Kiwis.

The India series, Sri Lanka's last before the World Cup, starts in Poona on February 8 and finishes at Visakhapatnam on February 17.

Bond hurts

coach John Bracewell was hoping the latest problem would be just muscle soreness.

"Shane doesn't know and he wants to know, that's why we've got to get it checked out rather than second guess," Bracewell told the New Zealand Press Association on Wednesday.

"I'm always concerned when one of my players gets injured, and he is a key performer for us."

"Obviously he has a history of back issues which we're trying to work him through, so it is a concern."

Bond took a hat-trick in his team's 105-run loss to Australia on Sunday, joining Danny Morrison as the only New Zealanders to achieve the feat in one-day internationals, but failed to capture a single wicket in the match against England.

Bond's injury is not the only concern for Bracewell whose batsmen are badly out of form after losing their last three matches to Sri Lanka, Australia then England.

"We are in what you would call a batting slump at the moment," Bracewell said.

"I can't quite put my finger on it, and it's not just a matter of confidence. Form is a fickle thing, each guy will have a different issue."

"At some point we have to start performing, because confidence and rhythm is an important part of going into the World Cup."

The World Cup will take place from March 13-April 28.

Calderon added: "If I am still president in June it is very likely that Kaka will be joining us."

Perez issued a denial of the accusations, saying he had been forced to break his recent silence because of the "magnitude of Calderon's lie".

"It is totally false that I spoke to Silvio Berlusconi about Kaka or any other player," the construction magnate said in a statement. "The whole suggestion is rather infantile."

The club's fans did not escape Calderon's ire with the Real chief saying that the Bernabeu faithful were too hard to please.

"It's a stadium where people go as if they were going to the theatre. The people don't support the team, not like in Italy and England."

Real issued a statement on their Web site www.realmadrid.com saying they were surprised and disappointed that Calderon's comments had been recorded and played on national radio.

"The president was only trying to help students understand the importance of management in a business as big as that of Real Madrid," the club said.

Gibbs to play 2nd Test

Appeal sets up ICC inquiry

Cricket

AFP, Johannesburg

Herschelle Gibbs will be able to play in the second Test against Pakistan in Port Elizabeth starting Friday after appealing against a two-Test ban for "racially offensive" comments broadcast over a stump microphone during the first Test in Centurion.

According to a statement from the International Cricket Council, the ICC has to appoint an appeals commissioner within two days, who then has seven days in which to hear the appeal.

The Gibbs affair has been front-page news in South Africa and the player has received public support after being heard making racist remarks about Pakistani supporters.

A poll in the Star newspaper found that 78 per cent of people felt Gibbs's ban was unjustified and only 22 per cent thought it was fair.

The SA Cricketers' Association has leant its full support to Gibbs.

Chief executive Tony Irish said: "It is not appropriate for us to deal publicly at this stage with the merits of the appeal before the ICC."

"However I can confirm that we are now awaiting the written statement from the match referee and the appointment of an Appeals Commissioner as provided for in the ICC Code of Conduct."

Meanwhile conflicting reports of the incidents which led to Gibbs's remarks have been published in South African newspapers.

The three spectators who were moved from seats near the boundary after allegedly swearing at bowler Paul Harris claim that Harris swore at them.

But other spectators say the Pakistani supporters were abusive and made watching the game unpleasant for people sitting near them.

Gibbs's father, meanwhile, has accused the ICC of looking away when South African players were victims of racist remarks in Australia last year.

"There are a bunch of incorrigible old men in the ICC," Herman Gibbs senior told the South African SuperSport website.

"They were unable to do anything about match fixing and are too afraid to tackle any controversial matter properly."

Herman Gibbs said his son was not in the slightest bit racist despite the finding by match referee Chris Broad that his comments overheard on television were "racially offensive".

A Cricket South Africa hearing into Gibbs's conduct has been postponed pending the outcome of his appeal to the ICC.

Proteas expect backlash

Cricket

AFP, Port Elizabeth

South Africa are expecting a stronger challenge from Pakistan in the second Test starting at St George's Park here on Friday.

Star batsman Mohammad Yousuf will be back in the team after missing Pakistan's seven-wicket defeat in the first Test at Centurion because his wife was having a baby, while Umar Gul and Shoaib Akhtar could both strengthen what was a disappointing bowling lineup.

Yousuf made a world record 1788 runs in a calendar year in 2006 at an average of 99.33 and completes a world class trio for Pakistan with Younis Khan and captain Inzamamul Haq in the three to five batting positions.

Inzamam said he expected Gul to have recovered from an ankle injury. The fast bowler was a key-figure in Pakistan's series win over the West Indies in November.

If fellow fast bowler Shoaib Akhtar is included, Pakistan will field four of the top 20 bowlers in the latest ICC Test rankings, together with Mohammad Asif and leg-spinner Danish Kaneria.

The inability to sustain pressure on the South African batting when Asif and Kaneria were not in action in Centurion was a major factor in South Africa taking a 1-0 lead in the three-match series.

South Africa are likely to field an unchanged team, with fast bowler Dale Steyn still struggling with a thigh strain.

There has been discussion, however, about the possibility of rotating the South African fast men to give Makhaya Ntini and Shaun Pollock a break before the World Cup in the West Indies in March.

South African captain Graeme Smith said he would prefer to pick the strongest possible team at all times but added: "You've got to be realistic in terms of the season. The bowlers have had a huge workload on wickets that haven't been too helpful."

Pitches have been a source of frustration to the South Africans this season, with their wins over India in Cape Town and Pakistan at Centurion achieved on surfaces which did not have the pace and

The accidental hero

Cricket

INTERNET, undated

Mike Hussey is Australia's accidental hero. Statistically the greatest finisher one-day cricket has seen, Hussey was once dropped from the West Australian limited-overs team because he performed so poorly in his established role as an opening batsman.

In his first 17 one-day matches for WA, mostly at the top of the order, Hussey averaged just 20 and had a poor strike rate of 3.66 runs per over.

"I had a couple of games as opener for WA and didn't do very well batting in those first 15 overs," he said on Tuesday. "I'm a more technically correct batsman who liked to take my time."

He was due to be 12th man in a one-day match against Victoria at the MCG in December 1999 when Damien Martyn injured his back and Simon Katich pulled out with what was eventually diagnosed as chronic fatigue syndrome.

"I came in as a late replacement down the order when we were in a lot of trouble and managed to get a hundred, so that's when it all started," Hussey said. "I was just trying to bat and it was one of those days when everything fell into place. I didn't try to do anything different."

With the score 5-66, Hussey made 100 not out in an unbroken 173-run partnership with Brad Hogg, allowing WA to go on to win the match convincingly.

All of a sudden, Hussey had reinvented himself from a stodgy, limited opener to a clever finisher.

"It gave me an opportunity to play a (Michael) Bevan-type role for WA, because he was dominating for Australia playing like that at the time," he said.

"Luckily he was doing that because it gave the right people the idea that I could do a similar sort of thing for WA."

Hussey's one-day form for Western Australia became so good, averaging 42 batting at numbers four and six and 51 batting at No.5 with a strike rate of almost a run a ball, that it earned him a Cricket Australia contract.

However, Hussey's inconsistency cost him two contracts before his persistence was rewarded with a third -- and he's grabbed it with both hands.

So good did Hussey become he almost immediately replaced Bevan in the one-day side as Australia's finisher soon after making his debut in February 2004 and last Sunday became the 45th Australian to play 50 one-day internationals.

While that may be a long list, Hussey is on his own when it comes to the best average. So well has he played at the 'death' in one-day matches that he has been not-out 19 times and averages 74 -- by far the best of any player who has played 50 matches or more. Next is Bevan with an average of 53.

Hussey also has an exceptional strike rate of 94. The only Australian to better that since the one-day game was first played internationally in 1971 is teammate Adam Gilchrist, who has a strike rate of 96. Putting that into context, the brutal West Indian Viv Richards had 90.

With the sudden retirement of Martyn, Hussey has moved up a place to No.6, between two of the game's heaviest hitters, Andrew Symonds and Cameron White.

Symonds has a strike rate of 92 in a well-established career, while White bludgeoned 45 runs in just 32 balls in his first innings of note, against New Zealand in Hobart last Sunday.

Despite his slight frame, Hussey is not adverse to the odd big hit either.

the field against the Kiwis and although he still opened the England innings, he eventually had to call on Jamie Dalrymple to act as a runner, before being caught for 17.

His setback is on top of the cracked rib sustained by star batsman Kevin Pietersen, who has returned to England but flagged the possibility that he may return if his side reaches the triangular series finals.

Meanwhile, New Zealand is still waiting for a definitive diagnosis of fast bowler Shane Bond's latest back problem.

Bond has battled back injuries throughout his career and was forced from the field by back soreness during his side's loss to England.

New Zealand coach John Bracewell said Bond was still feeling stiff and would see a sports physician on Thursday morning, with a clearer picture of his injury status likely to emerge within 48 hours.
