30 civilians, 2 soldiers die in surge of violence

AFP, AP, Baghdad

Iraqi and US forces yesterday prepared to launch a massive crackdown in Baghdad to end the sectarian carnage pushing Iraq toward civil war as at least another 30 people died in a surge of violence.

The sustained bloodshed came after nearly 200 people were killed over the weekend, mostly in the war-torn capital.

Iraqi forces on Monday stepped up security in some volatile districts on the eastern side of the Tigris river, which runs through Baghdad, an AFP photographer reported. Iraqi soldiers and National Guard police were deployed on Baghdad's main eastern highway leading to the Shia bastion of Sadr City, a repeated insurgent target, he said.

Tanks and other armoured vehicles along with National Guard police were seen at various locations on the road to Sadr City and in districts such as Karrada.

New control points were set up in the districts of Karrada, Rusafa, Mustansiriyyah, Adhamiyah and Sadr City, all to the east of the Tigris.

On some bridges, guard posts were protected by tanks and barbed wire as soldiers stopped and checked drivers, the photographer said.
