

Sharp rise in violence against woman in southwestern dists

250 killed last year against 65 in previous year: 400 commit suicide

AMANUR AMAN, From Kushtia

Violence against women increased alarmingly in ten southwestern districts last year over that in the previous year.

At least 250 women were murdered in 2006, up from previous year's 65, according to records with police and different NGOs.

Most of the victims were housewives, killed in torture allegedly by their husbands or their family members. Demand for dowry was the main reason for torture, the records said.

Alongside, incidents of suicide by women also marked a rise. At least 400 such cases were detected during 2006 in the 10 districts.

Incidents of rape however declined compare to any previous time.

The abnormal rise in murders and incidents of alarmed high police officials and civic society leaders in the area.

Talking to this correspondent, some elderly people here said such incidents are increasing due to rise in social unrest for various reasons including poverty.

Records show that 95 women were killed in incidents of violence in the region from January to June last year, which shot up to 155 during June-December.

This was an abnormal rise from 65 murders during 2005, some police officials in Kushtia said seeking anonymity.

The highest number of 86 murders took place in Kushtia during the period. The district also topped the list with 60 murders in 2005.

Murders recorded in other nine districts in 2006 are 28 in Khulna, 32 in Meherpur, 26 in Chuadanga, 31 in Jhenidah, 11 in Magura, 22 in Jessore, 9 in Bagerhat and 5 Narail.

Husbands were responsible for the incidents of violence in most cases. Other family members were also found involved in torture for dowry.

In few cases, poverty was behind family feuds leading to torture by husbands, NGO sources said.

"Violence against women and death from torture is increasing day by day," a doctor of Kushtia General Hospital said.

A large number of incidents of violence against women or suicide remained unrecorded as the victims' relatives avoided filing cases, police sources in Kushtia said. Those were recorded as unnatural deaths, he said.

NGO officials working on violence against women said in many cases, victims' families did not lodge case fearing retaliation by the killers and apprehending alleged harassment by police.

"They (victims' families) also want to avoid unwanted trouble and harassment because in most cases, killers are protected by their influential patrons or a section of law enforcers", said M A Kader, executive director of SETU, a Kushtia-based NGO.

This correspondent also contacted several high police officials in other districts in the region, who shared similar views on the issue.

In Kushtia, only 46 cases were filed against 86 murders last year, police sources said.

Seventeen cases were filed in Jhenidah, 18 in Chuadanga and 14 in Meherpur.

In many cases, killers escape punishment as victim's family does not dare to file case due to intervention by local influentials including political party leaders, said Meherpur Police Superintendent Khondokar Rafiqul Islam.

Grabbers have occupied the shoreland at Kostura Ghat in Bakkhali river by erecting a railing with poles and are dumping garbage to fill up the encroached area.

The Bakkhali river flowing through Cox's Bazar tourist town is dying fast because of unabated encroachment by land grabbers.

They have grabbed shorelands and built illegal structures at different points on both sides of the river.

According to sources at Cox's Bazar Pourasabha, about 700 illegal structures were constructed on both sides of the river in last five years. Most of the establishments are in Fishari Ghat, Choynomber, Kostora Ghat, Peskarpara, Tekpara and Ander-son Road areas of the town. The grabbers built the structures as the district administration and the municipal authorities played the role of a silent spectator, the sources said.

Cox's Bazar, which was once a flourishing trade centre, is also losing importance as the Bakkhali, its lifeline is gradually being choked, local people and traders said. It is also losing navigability as silt is being deposited due to encroachment, they said.

Numerous shoals have emerged in the riverbed, they said.

Influentials, most of them businessmen enjoying political clout have built houses and business establishments by grabbing lands on both sides of the river. They dump garbage to grab lands, which accelerates the deposit of silt.

On contact, Cox's Bazar Pourasabha Commissioner Helenaz Tahera said she raised the issue at district development committee meetings several times but to no effect as most of the land grabbers are influential people. The river should be freed from grabbers for survival of the old trade center in the region, he said.

Korshed Alam, a noted businessman said encroachers should be evicted immediately to restore normal flow of the river and promote trade and commerce in the resort

Only united efforts by people of all strata of life can save the river from death, he said.

The administration at times take some 'eyewash steps' and evict small illegal structures, but those sprang up again after a few days, they said.

When contacted, Cox's Bazar Pourasabha Chairman Sarwar Kamal, said he is aware of land grabbing, but helpless because the management of the river is vested with the Bangladesh Inter Water Transport Authority (BIWTA).

"We are ready to assist BIWTA if wants to evict the encroachers", he said.

"We want to demolish the illegal structures because those damage the beauty of the tourist town", he said.

The BIWTA authorities could not be contacted for comments despite several attempts by this correspondent.
