WOMEN MIGRANT WORKERS

'Apply CEDAW to protect rights'

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Speakers at a meeting yesterday called for using the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW) as guidelines for establishing women's rights.

As a huge number of women go abroad as migrant workers, the country could apply relevant articles of the CEDAW in order to protect their rights, they added.

Bangladesh is a signatory to the CEDAW but it is yet to ratify the charter.

Management and Resources Development Initiative (MRDI) organised the consultative meeting on CEDAW with women journalists. The meeting was part of a project titled 'Strengthening media capacity in promoting rights of female migrant workers' being implemented by MRDI with the support of the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM), Bangladesh.

The CEDAW is a comprehensive treaty and it focuses on ideologies, structures and systems and bridges the gap between civil and political rights, social and economic rights, said Naheed M Ahmed, national programme manager of Unifem Bangladesh.

Although the number of women migrant workers has increased, the exact figure could not be known as many of them are undocumented, she said.

She also called for lifting all the restrictions on migration of women workers.

Terming migration as an important issue, Executive Director of MRDI Hasibur Rahman said in-house training for reporters could play an important role in ensuring safe migration.
