Bin Laden 50 today?

REUTERS, AK, Afghanistan

Osama bin Laden, if he's alive, celebrates his 50th birthday yesterday, and his friends in the Taliban prayed for his long life.

The al Qaeda leader's long silence has fueled speculation that the world's most-wanted fugitive may have died, though many in the international intelligence community reckon Islamist militant Web sites would circulate word of his death.

"He is alive. I am 100 percent sure," Taliban spokesman Mullah Hayatullah Khan told Reuters.

18 killed in Baghdad suicide bombing

AP, Baghdad

A suicide car bomb struck Baghdad's Shia militia stronghold yesterday, killing at least 18 people as international envoys met in the Iraqi capital to talk about stabilising the violence-shattered country.

The blast hit an Iraqi patrol in Sadr City at midday, scattering burning debris across a small bridge, witnesses said.

An Associated Press reporter traveling with US troops nearby said the explosion showered shrapnel across a joint US-Iraq security station 300 yards away. The partially shattered windshield of a car landed at the gates of the compound.

Police said at least 18 people were killed and 48 wounded.

Home to about 2.5 million of Baghdad's poorest residents, Sadr City is the base for fighters allied to anti-American cleric Muqtada al-Sadr. His militia, the Mahdi Army, has laid low in recent weeks during a US-Iraqi security crackdown under pressure from Iraqi Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki.

Hours earlier, Iraqi special forces teams backed by US soldiers detained six suspects believed to be a rogue members of the Mahdi

Army, the US military said in a statement.

The suspects were accused of coordinating and carrying out kidnappings and murders of Iraqi civilians, the statement said.

In central Baghdad, two mortars fell near Iraq's Foreign Ministry, where envoys gathered for an international conference on how to quell the violence and bolster Iraq's government. There were no reports of injuries, but smoke was visible from the meeting area.

Meanwhile, Iraqi officials said

Lankan fighting escalates

8 killed in wildlife park

AFP, Colombo

Suspected Tamil Tiger rebels shot dead four security personnel and four park officials inside a wildlife sanctuary as fighting escalated elsewhere on the island, the military said yesterday.

The bullet-riddled bodies of the eight men were found following a search operation in the Wilpattu national park in the northwest of the island, a military official said.

Another official in the region said the victims were on their way to identify locations for setting up military detachments on the perimeters of the sprawling wildlife sanctuary, when they were ambushed on Friday.

There was no immediate word from the Tamil Tigers about the latest attack, but the guerrillas said they were returning the bodies of four police commandos killed in heavy fighting raging in the island's restive eastern province.

Tamil Tiger spokesman Rasiah Ilanthyrian said the rebels buried two other bodies of elite Special Task Force (STF) commandos because they were too mutilated.

A total of nine STF commandos were killed in Friday's confrontations with the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE), the Tigers said, adding that they lost only one of their combatants in the district of Ampara.
