

There are many ways, often inexpensive, to promote the cause of architectural conservation. This on one hand requires examples of successful conservation work, and on the other hand awareness, cooperation and participation of the community in which the heritage structures are located. The measures need proper documentation with measured drawings, visuals and texts. Since the 1990s, the awareness about their value, the need for conservation, and means of economic regeneration has increased, especially among the architects and environmental pressure groups.
