World powers to meet Iraq neighbours again

AFP, Baghdad

The Iraqi government has agreed to a new meeting between its neighbours and world powers in Egypt next month, Foreign Minister Hoshyar Zebari said yesterday.

"The Iraqi government agreed to hold the next ministerial meeting of Iraq neighbouring countries, plus the G5 (UN Security Council veto-wielding permanent members) and G8 (most industrialised nations) in Egypt, most probably in Sharm el-Sheikh on May 3 and 4," Zebari told a Baghdad news conference.

An ambassador-level conference held in Baghdad on March 10 to discuss the security situation in Iraq saw the United States and regional foes Iran and Syria hold rare direct talks.

That meeting was due to be followed up by the ministerial-level conference, which could see US Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice meet her Iranian counterpart -- a meeting that the US State Department has not ruled out.

Although Zebari did not specify the individual breakdown of the guest list for the May talks, he expressed hope that it would lead to dialogue and said it could present an opportunity to help break the "deadlock".

Against a background of increasing tension across the region, Zebari said the expanded ministerial meeting was "very important".
