

CDA PLAN APPROVAL PROCESS

Massive changes get under way for planned city

ABDULLAH AL MAHMUD

Chittagong Development Authority (CDA) is set to bring in massive changes in the process of approving plans for building construction and planned growth of structures strictly following the zoning system in the port city.

Under the new initiative, CDA will dismantle the Building Construction (BC) Committee or Authorisation Committee to form two such committees with members from other organisations apart from CDA.

Besides, it will form a land use committee or planning committee with a different shape comprising additional number of members.

CDA at its meeting of board of directors on April 4 has approved a draft restructuring both the planning and BC committees.

The board meeting also proposed creation of one additional post of superintendent engineer and seven official posts of BC inspectors without any official post of authorisation officer.

An executive engineer posted as member secretary of the BC committee exercises the power of authorisation officer, sources said.

As per the proposed structure, the chief engineer will head the land use committee or planning committee instead of the chairman.

Three executive engineers in the planning committee will take care of different aspects of area, investment and town planning.

The committee will also include an assistant town planner, an assistant architect, an authorisation officer and representatives from IEB, IAB and Institute of Planning as members.

The planning committee will be responsible for determining zones and layout for residential, commercial and industrial areas, said the sources at CDA.

It will prepare strategy for officers, who might come from CDA or on deputation from any other organisations, to act as member secretaries of the BC committees.

Each committee will have one assistant engineer, an assistant town planner, one representative from Institute of Engineers, Bangladesh (IEB) and one from Institute of Architects, Bangladesh (IAB) as members.

There will be two 10-member teams under the BC committees at the filed level to inspect the proposed site for construction and monitor construction of structures as per the approved plan.

At present CDA has one post of superintendent engineer and seven official posts of BC inspectors without any official post of authorisation officer.

As per the proposed structure, the chief engineer will head the land use committee or planning committee instead of the chairman.

Three executive engineers in the planning committee will take care of different aspects of area, investment and town planning.

The committee will also include an assistant town planner, an assistant architect, an authorisation officer and representatives from IEB, IAB and Institute of Planning as members.

The planning committee will be responsible for determining zones and layout for residential, commercial and industrial areas, said the sources at CDA.

It will prepare strategy for planned growth of the city with construction of structures as per the zoning system, they said.

Due to lack of proper monitoring, alternative use of land and construction in deviation of approved plan seriously hampered the planned growth of the city.

Irregularities and corrupt practices in approving plans also attributed to growth of structures defying the zoning system, sources said.

CDA Chairman Shah Mohammad Akhteruddin said, "Formation of new BC committees and planning committee aims at decentralising the power and bringing in transparency in providing approval to plans for construction."

"The proposed committees with additional strength will help CDA show better performance," he said.

Akhteruddin said they have proposed to raise the official posts of BC inspectors to 21 considering the increasing activities of CDA that already had the area under its jurisdiction extended to 445 square miles (1152 square kilometres) from the previous 212 square miles.

"We are introducing floor area ration in the BC rules where any plan will be approved within 30 days," he said.

"Besides, we are making it compulsory for the developers to be the member of Rehab that would have close association with the CDA for planned growth of the city," he added.

Cars rush to CNG conversion centres after fuel price hike

DWAIPAYAN BARUA

The CNG conversion centres in the port city are not able to cope with the rush of petrol, octane or diesel-run vehicles to convert them into Compressed Natural Gas (CNG) ones following the price hike of fuel.

Owners of petrol and octane-driven vehicles are thronging the conversion centres in greater numbers every day to convert their vehicles.

But there is no respite for the passengers, who in fact know that the fare in public transports will take a hop step when the government decides to increase the fuel price, intensifying their agony.

Owners of City Bus Service said they are yet to increase the fare in their diesel-run buses.

They, however, said they will increase the fare within a few days after publication of the government gazette.

MD Abdul Hakim, Lineman Secretary of City Bus Mini Bus Human Hauler Association, said they did not increase the fare for a long time though the price of fuel had increased on different occasions.

He said it is very difficult to bear the maintaining costs of vehicles due to hike in fuel price.

Although a rush is seen for conversion, many of them are yet to take decision in this regard considering involvement of huge money, he added.

MA Halim, a bus owner, said it costs around Tk 3 lakh for conversion of a diesel-run bus into CNG.

Besides, most of the conversion centres are not capable of converting the diesel-run vehicles like buses and trucks, he said, adding that they convert only the petrol or octane-run vehicles.

It takes Tk 30,000 to 35,000 for conversion of an auto-rickshaw, Tk 45,000 to 50,000 for a private car and Tk 90,000 for a microbus, sources said

There are 15 CNG conversion centres in Chittagong. Of them, only Navana and Intraco CNG Limited are capable of converting the diesel-run vehicles.

Most of around 13,000 four-stroke auto-rickshaws in the port city were converted in the past, sources said.

A few private cars and microbus have also been converted into CNG ones while the diesel-run city buses as well as trucks are yet to decide in this regard, said Md Mostafa Kamal, deputy commissioner (north) and also acting DC (traffic).

He, however, could not tell the exact number of CNG-driven vehicles in the port city.

Vehicle owners, who are willing to convert the engines of their vehicles into CNG due to fuel price hike, are now facing difficulties for lack of adequate conversion centres.

Several owners opted for making advance booking in conversion centres against their vehicles.

Mokhlesur Rahman Mukul, senior executive (marketing) of Intraco CNG Limited, said they are not taking any more booking for conversion as it is already booked for this month (April).

Same scenario has been noticed in other conversion centres like Southern, Navana, Asia Fuel, Rahim Aafroze, Meem and Chittagong City Corporation-run conversion centre at Wasa intersection.

"We are to convert 15 to 20 vehicles a day now while it was five to ten," Mukul said.

Businessman Bazlur Rashid on Sunday said it took five days to get the serial of Intraco workshop to convert his car into CNG.

He said fuel cost will decrease around 70 per cent after converting the engine into CNG.

MD Yusuf, driver of a private car, said he used to spend Tk 5,000 to Tk 6,000 on petrol and octane a month in the past while he now manages it at Tk 1,200 only after conversion into CNG.
