Public Service Commission (PSC) in a rejoinder to a story headlined "Telltale evidence corruption at PSC" published in The Daily Star on May 4 said the report is false and baseless.

The rejoinder signed by PSC Deputy Secretary (administration) Moeqbul Hossain claimed that the incidents of taking bribe from aspirant candidates of 27th BCS on behalf of the PSC top office bearer are imaginary, malicious, defamatory and provocative. The main claims made in the rejoinder are the following:

- 1) Marks of written exams are kept in the computer system in coded form and not provided to the members of the viva board.
- 2) The allegation of placing bribe-offering candidates' reports at certain viva board is totally baseless and false as the viva boards are formed according to the registration serial numbers of the candidates.

Govt to repossess eight privatised textile mills

JASIM UDDIN KHAN

The government is planning to take back the ownership of eight formerly state owned textile mills from the current private managements due to their failure to run those efficiently.

Government authorities alleged that the managements, whose personnel are former workers and employees of the mills, of misappropriation of funds, failure to pay any instalment of the share prices to the government, and of selling and leasing out mill lands violating contracts.

Bangladesh Textile Mills Corporation (BTMC) prepared a position paper regarding the matter, to be submitted soon to the chief adviser to the caretaker government for consideration.

"Yes we are thinking of taking back the managements of eight formerly state owned textile mills from the former employees of the mills to whom the government handed over the ownership. They breached the contract with the government in many ways. They failed to repay bank loans, and to pay other liabilities but siphoned off crores of taka by selling valuable machinery from the mills," Sharful Alam, chairman of BTMC, said.

BTMC is in a dire situation as different banks and other financial institutions have initiated processes to auction off the BTMC building, the chairman said. "We have to protect the once reputed institution from being ruined as it is still serving thousands of rural weavers who mainly depend on cheaper yarns from BTMC," he added.

BTMC will be able to successfully operate the eight textile mills worth over Tk 1,000 crore by leasing ing them out to more competent management contractors.

According to the agreement between the government and the workers and employees who currently possess the mills, the government is empowered to take back the ownership of those mills any time if the current managements breach the agreement.

The current managements of the mills owe Tk 675.16 crore to different gas providers, Tk 232.15 crore as land tax, Tk 204.36 crore as municipality tax, and Tk 11.11 crore as surcharges, sources said.

The authorities of the mills failed to pay any instalment of Tk 8.83 crore share prices for the mills to the government.

The current managements of the mills also owe Tk 253 crore to banks as long term repayment of loans.

Star dies in brightest supernova

AFP, Washington

US stargazers beheld the most spectacular supernova ever seen when a massive star exploded in a cosmic flash 50 billion times brighter than the sun, the space agency Nasa said on Monday.

"Of all exploding stars ever observed, this was the king," said Alex Filippenko, one of the leaders of the Nasa-backed operations which observed the phenomenon that began last fall, in a statement presenting the find.

"We were astonished to see how bright it got, and how long it lasted," said Filippenko, who headed teams at the Lick Observatory at Mount Hamilton, California, and the Keck Observatory in Mauna Kea, Hawaii.

The supernova, named SN 2006gy, was likely caused by "the death of an extremely massive star," said Dave Pooley of the University of California at Berkeley, who headed the overall observation project by NASA's Chandra X-ray Observatory.

Bomb dents Iraqi govt's credibility

16 people killed in car bomb blast

AFP, Baghdad

A powerful car bomb exploded in the Iraqi city of Kufa yesterday, killing 16 people and unleashing a wave of anger at the government's apparent inability to protect the Shia heartland.

Iraq's southern shrine cities of Najaf, Karbala and Kufa have often been targeted by Sunni insurgents waging a sectarian war against the country's majority population.

"The final toll of the attack in Kufa is 16 killed and 70 wounded," Bassim Naema, spokesman for the provincial health department, told AFP.

Mayor Abu Dhar Yusef said a car packed with explosives appeared to have targeted a two-storey restaurant popular with pilgrims who flock to the shrines in this Shia town 140 kilometres (87 miles) south of Baghdad.

"Why did it take security forces more than half an hour to get to the area?" demanded the enraged mayor amid a scene of devastation in the marketplace.

"Why did they not send us more support than just some ambulances and firemen?"

Angry crowds filled the main square and brandished bloodied body parts to news cameras while chanting anti-American slogans and condemning terrorism.

Kufa is a stronghold of supporters of radical cleric Moqtada al-Sadr, and each time government security forces fail to prevent an attack it triggers calls for his Mahdi Army militia to return to the streets.

"We blame the Iraqi government and the American army for this incident," shouted Hussein Kadhim.

"How could a driver leave his car in this area? How could he have passed through several checkpoints and then park it in a forbidden zone?" asked Ahmed Mohammed amid the chanting crowds.

"The Iraqi government should admit that it can't protect the people," he added in disgust.

Every bloody blast in these overwhelmingly Shia cities has become fodder for the government's critics in Sadr's movement.

"The government is responsible for the security, economy and welfare of the people -- what has it really achieved in those respects?" asked parliamentarian Nasser al-Rubayi, a member of Sadr's opposition parliamentary bloc.

"We expect from now on there will be a mass explosion whenever
