grandson. But, the sole intention is not to narrate the stories of 'death'. The elderly character also narrates his passion for the loved ones. And these cherished memories as well as his feelings at the parting of the family members have been presented in flash back scenes.

Director Deepa Khondokar's efforts deserve plaudits, specifically the presentation of rural Bangladesh. The "village fair" scene is vibrant.

Set designer Kiriti Ranjan Biswas and noted Indian light designer Tapash Sen creates a realistic ambience. Music for the dance-drama has been composed by Shujeo Shyam. Actor-director-repocitor Mujibur Rahman Dilu has done the recitation.

Before the show, Mujibur Rahman, also the co-coordinator of the production Kabor, spoke at the programme. The dance-drama is a Tonatuni production.

The poetry of flowers Ikebana demonstration and seminar at National Museum

KARIM WAHEED

"Ikebana", the Japanese art of flower arrangement, has evolved into a global phenomenon. Also known as "Kado" (way of flowers), the art-form is fast gaining popularity among enthusiasts in Bangladesh.

In his speech, the Japanese Ambassador said, "Ikebana has flourished in Japan in the last 500 years. While western style of flower arrangement focuses primarily on the decorative aspect, the Japanese try to denote the harmony in nature."

"The demonstration and seminar will highlight the "Ikenobo" style of Ikebana. Ikenobo is the oldest school of Ikebana and the tradition developed in Kyoto as a Buddhist floral offering."

"Currently there are around 3,000 Ikebana schools in Japan. The art-form is practiced by 15 million in Japan alone. There are 60,000 Ikenobo teachers around the world."

"We believe cultural bond has the most profound impact among all kinds of ties between nations. A meaningful relationship can only materialise when both parties understand and respect each other's traditions and culture. On the occasion of 35th anniversary of diplomatic relationship between Japan and Bangladesh, I hope this demonstration and seminar will encourage flora enthusiasts in Bangladesh." Director general of National Museum, Samar Chandra Paul said, "Wild flowers bloom and wither in the bushes and by the sidewalks in our country. Hopefully, this growing interest in Ikebana will inspire Bangladeshis to create beautiful designs with our local flowers."

Secretary to the Ministry of Cultural Affairs, ABM Abdul Howk Chowdhury was the chief guest at the event.

Two renowned Ikenobo teachers from Japan - Ishiwata Masafumi and Sasayama Yasufumi - conducted a demonstration on different arrangements in Ikenobo style.

A rather unfortunate and embarrassing incident was the eager audience that included foreign delegates and other dignitaries, getting annoyed by two incompetent translators wasting about 20 minutes fumbling and stuttering incoherently. The translators were eventually replaced.

Using flowers and vases bought in Dhaka, the two masters demonstrated three arrangements in Ikenobo style. In the "Rikka" arrangement, basic parts are arranged with several contrasting but complementary materials, delineating the beauty of a landscape. "Shoka", another arrangement, comprises three main branches -- "shin", "soe" and "tai" -- forming a unity that symbolises life's perpetual change and regeneration. The "free style" is the most recent to emerge from the Ikenobo way of Ikebana. As a more personal expression, it is suited to contemporary environments and tastes.

The programme ended yesterday with a seminar at Nalinikanta Bhattashali Hall.

Japan plans 'Nobel Prize of Manga'

AP, Tokyo

Japan will hand out its first "Nobel Prize of Manga" this summer for artists in the comic book genre abroad, the Foreign Ministry said recently -- another step in its efforts to harness the power of pop culture diplomacy.

The International Manga Award -- which manga enthusiast Foreign Minister Tarō Aso likened to a "Nobel Prize" when he first proposed it last year -- will be given to an artist working abroad whose work best contributes to the spread of the manga form worldwide, the ministry said in a statement.

Manga, a name used for Japanese-style comic books, often combine complex stories with drawing styles that differ from their overseas superhero counterparts, particularly in their frequent emphasis on cuteness. The winner and three runners-up will receive a certificate and trophy at an awards ceremony set for July 2, and will spend 10 days in Japan meeting with local comic book artists and publishers, the statement said.

"Manga and anime have been spreading overseas and are selling quite well." Aso said in announcing the award at a regular press briefing. "I want to further boost the communicative power of these so-called pieces of pop culture."

Anime is the Japanese term for animated films. The award committee, to be composed of manga artists and publishers, is expected to make its selections around June 22, the ministry statement said.

The prize carries no monetary reward, ministry official Nobuyuki Watanabe said. The trophy's design has yet to be finalised, but it would be something "appropriate," he said.
