Govt, Tigers trade allegations over killings

Sri Lanka's government has asked Norway to help revive a moribund peace process amid an escalation of fighting between troops and Tamil Tiger rebels, a press report said yesterday.

A top aide of President Mahinda Rajapakse asked Norway's peace facilitator Erik Solheim to send his envoy Jon Hannsen-Bauer for direct face-to-face talks with Tamil Tiger rebels and help resume peace negotiations, the Sunday Times said.

There was no immediate word from the government, but diplomatic sources said Oslo had been asking for clearance to travel to the rebel-held Wanni region to meet with the rebels to discuss the future of the peace initiative.

The Sri Lankan government has turned down requests for Norwegian diplomats here to cross front lines and meet with the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE) leaders, saying that it was unsafe because of ongoing fighting.

The Sunday Times said that the decision to invite a Norwegian envoy to travel to Wanni was an indication that the Colombo government was ready to save a collapsing truce and revive the peace process.

"It is also a reiteration of the government's commitment to the ceasefire agreement of February 2002," the Times said. "Official pronouncements had earlier cast doubts over the future of the ceasefire."

Peace talks between the Sri Lankan government and the Tiger rebels collapsed in October last year leading to a further escalation of fighting.

Norway held a meeting of Sri Lanka's top aid donors last week in a bid to halt the new wave of bloodshed, but there was no breakthrough following that gathering.

More than 5,000 people have been killed in the new wave of fighting since December 2005 despite a truce in place since February 2002.

Meanwhile, Gunmen have shot dead two civilians in Sri Lanka's northern Jaffna peninsula, officials said Sunday as the government and Tamil Tigers blamed each other for the latest in a string of such killings.

The men were murdered Saturday in two separate incidents on the government-controlled peninsula, situated at the northern tip of Sri Lanka but cut off from the rest of the island by Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE) territory.

"The two civilians were shot dead by the suspected LTTE assassins in separate incidents in the Jaffna peninsula during the last 24 hours," the defence ministry in Colombo said.

The pro-rebel Tamilnet.com website, however, said it was the work of military intelligence operatives.

"Informed Jaffna sources said that the terror campaign has been stepped up by military intelligence operatives following a Claymore attack in Navanthurai where a military intelligence official was reportedly killed," Tamilnet said.

Some 200 heavily-armed Maoists attacked two police stations in India's eastern Bihar state, killing six constables and three villagers, police said yesterday.

The attacks on the neighbouring stations took place late Saturday, police said from district headquarters some 30km away.

"They attacked both the police stations so that they would not be able to aid each other," said a policeman in Rohtas district, more than 1,000 kilometres from New Delhi.

"They used petrol bombs, grenades, rifles and AK-47's. Whatever weapons the police avail of, they also had."

Five people were wounded in the attack and had been taken to neighbouring Uttar Pradesh state for treatment, the policeman said.

AFP, Lahore

Pakistani intelligence have busted a gang of Islamic militants supplying suicide bombers and explosive devices to Taliban fighters in neighbouring Afghanistan, police said Sunday.

The eight-member gang led by former fighters of the banned Jaish-e-Mohammad militant group was based in Quetta, the capital of southwestern Baluchistan province, a senior police official said.

They used to collect materials and volunteers from the central province of Punjab, the official said, requesting anonymity. The suspects were arrested in Punjab over the past few days.

"During the interrogation they confessed to having carried out a series of suicide bombings and bomb blasts against foreign forces in Afghanistan over the past several years," he said.

He identified the gang leaders as Mufti Saghir Ahmed, a veteran of the 1980s war against invading Soviet troops in Afghanistan, and wanted militant Mohammad Safeer. Both are members of the Jaish group, he said.

Safeer was wanted over an attack on a church in the Pakistani town of Taxila in 2003.

"The suspects were preparing remote-controlled devices for the Taliban in Afghanistan," the official said.

"It's a major breakthrough in the fight against terrorism and reflects Pakistan's strong commitment to fight militancy," a senior security official said.

The network was supplementing Taliban fighters based in southern Afghanistan, he said. They had "links" with former mujahedeen leader Jalaluddin Haqqani and his pro-Taliban son Siraj Haqqani, he added.

Hindus resume trek to melting Kashmir shrine

AFP, Srinagar

Hindus have resumed a trek to a sacred cave shrine in Indian Kashmir housing a fast-melting, phallus-shaped ice form, a day after heavy rains halted the pilgrimage, officials said Sunday.

"Nearly 7,500 pilgrims left for the holy cave from Nunwun base camp," state official Abdul Rouf told AFP by telephone from the village, which serves as base camp for the 50-kilometre (30-mile) trek.

A few thousand also left for the cave high in the Himalayas from a shorter route, northeast of Kashmir's summer capital Srinagar, he said, bringing the total number of pilgrims setting forth Sunday to some 13,000.

"The landslides have been cleared from the tracks and the weather is sunny," said Rouf from Nunwun, 100 kilometres south of Srinagar.

The suspension of the trek on its official start date of Saturday upset thousands of Hindu devotees who were anxious to see the ice form, worshipped as a symbol of the god of destruction Shiva, before it turns to water.

Pakistan asks India to activate body on prisoners

INDO-ASIAN NEWS SERVICE, Islamabad

Pakistan has accused India of delaying the exchange of prisoners by not activating the bilateral mechanism agreed upon and set up in March this year.

This was communicated to New Delhi through diplomatic channels earlier this week along with a call for early convening of the committee's inaugural meeting.

It is likely to be discussed at the home secretary-level talks scheduled in New Delhi next week, Dawn newspaper said Sunday.

Quoting unnamed diplomatic sources, it said that the proposal underlines the need for drawing up the committee's terms of reference. It also suggests procedures for the committee to address the plight of prisoners by expediting consular access and determining national status.

During the foreign ministers meeting held in Islamabad in January, Pakistan and India had agreed to establish a committee on prisoners. It comprised four retired judges of the superior judiciary of each side, who would visit jails in the two countries.

The committee, formed at Pakistan's initiative, is meant to propose steps to the two governments to ensure humane treatment and expedite release as well as repatriate prisoners on both sides.

Despite repeated claims by Pakistan and India of attaching high priority to the issue of civilian prisoners and treating it on humanitarian grounds, they have failed to convene a meeting of the committee on prisoners, the newspaper said.
