CCC original building at risk of collapse

NUR UDDIN ALAMGIR

The century-old original building of Chittagong City Corporation (CCC) lies in a most dilapidated condition and may collapse during any natural calamity.

Some 300 CCC officials and employees risk their lives everyday while working in the building that has been housing several departments since the port city started its journey as a municipality back in 1863, sources said.

Despite being one of the government agencies for planned urbanisation and ensuring safety of city dwellers, CCC is quite indifferent to the safety of its own officials and staffs working there.

The three-storey old building, which now stands as an annex of the six-storey new building, has lost its strength to such an extent that its floors shake terribly when any heavy vehicle plies on the nearby roads.

Cracks have developed in almost every wall and ceiling of the building and plasters frequently fall down from the ceiling injuring officials and employees.

But, the authorities are yet to take any initiative to renovate the building or shift its officials and employees to a safer place, alleged the sources in CCC.

"Water also seep through the ceilings and pour into the rooms during heavy downpours," said CCC Assistant Secretary Nazrul Islam while talking to this correspondent at his office on the second floor of the building.

"One of our staffs received injury when plaster fell on his head around two months back," Nazrul said, adding, "We informed the high officials of the incident calling for immediate step and they assured us of demolishing the building."

To stop the rainwater from entering inside, the authorities covered the rooftop of the building with tins.

Condition of the top floor is very miserable as many large cracks have developed there, sources said.

Superintendent Engineer (Circle-2) Nizam Uddin Chowdhury admitted the miserable condition of the building.

He said they are thinking of constructing a new multi-storied building with parking and other necessary facilities after demolishing the old building that might cost Tk 2 to 3 crore.

Pahartali drain woe of Rly colonies

DWAIPAYAN BARUA

Several thousand people of different railway colonies at Pahartali area in the port city fear inundation whenever it rains.

The people of these colonies experience untold sufferings due to serious waterlogging even after a little downpour of medium scale.

"Only a drain that has been lying without renovation for years is the main reason behind our woes and sufferings," said Golam Mostafa, a retired Loco Master of Bangladesh Railway residing here for the last 20 years.

The 5300-ft long drain stretching from Foy's Lake adjoining Jalalabad Murgi Farm area to Nimtala Khal under Bandar Police Station passes through different Railway colonies like Executive Engineer's (XEN) Colony, Master Lane Colony, Panjabi Lane Colony, Firoj Shah Colony and Saraipara.

The drain is connected with the river Karnaphuli through Nimtala Khal.

The 20-foot width drain near Chittagong Television (CTV) building has now narrowed down to three feet to four feet at many points.

The colony dwellers blamed absence of proper drainage system for waterlogging and inundation.

In absence of proper maintenance and disposal of garbage at many points of the drain and illegal structures on both the sides have worsened the situation further, they said.

Loosen earth flowing with rainwater also fills up the drain as the development work of the hilltop sites for Imperial Hospital and Police Line of GRP continues without constructing retaining walls.

Besides, a road, developed by USTC authorities, has been left uncarpeted for over a year also contributes to the filling of the drain.

As a result, the areas of XEN and Master Lane colonies and a part of Wireless and Panjabi Lane colonies are inundated with drain water after a one-hour of downpour.

Dirty water enters almost all 144 quarters of the railway employees in XEN colony and 178 quarters in Master Lane colony.

About 1000 houses that grew up illegally on the railway land adjoining the quarters also submerge under rainwater.

The quarters of XEN colony and Master Lane colony were inundated by waist-deep water due to excessive rain on June 11, forcing the inmates to leave for safe shelter.

The affected families took shelter in the neighbouring Wireless Colony and Panjabi Lane that are situated comparatively on a high high land, said Jahangir Babu, a resident of Master Lane.

"We didn't face such a situation in the last 15 years like June 11 when boundary walls of many quarters of two colonies collapsed," he said.

Loco Master Kabir Ahmad, also a resident of Master Lane, said most of his wooden furniture, including beds, coaches, chairs and tables and electric appliances like television and table fan were damaged when the colony remained under rain-water for three days since June 11.

Waterlogging is now a common scene in the colonies, causing sufferings to the dwellers throughout the year, Kabir said.

The retaining walls erected on both the sides of the drain during the Pakistan era started getting damaged since 1985 and vanished by 1990, said Khondaker Md Khaled, a teacher of XEN Colony Social Welfare Coaching Centre.

No step has been taken so far by the railway authorities to re-construct the retaining walls, he added.

Md Ramzan Ali, divisional engineer (DEN)-2, said he informed the matter to the divisional railway manager and chief engineer (east) when the order for re-excavation and renovation work of the drain was made.

"We have started preliminary work in this regard and hope to start re-excavation soon to restore normal state of the drain," said Engineer Ramzan.

The drain that had a width of 20 feet at starting point near CTV building at Pahartali is about to disappear due to encroachment.
