SHIA CRACKDOWN Iraq starts trial of 'Chemical Ali'

AFP, Baghdad

The trial of 15 former aides of executed Iraqi dictator Saddam Hussein for crimes against humanity over their alleged role in the crushing of a 1991 Shia rebellion opened in Baghdad on Tuesday.

Among those taking their seats in the dock was Saddam's cousin Ali Hassan al-Majid -- widely known as "Chemical Ali" -- who has already been sentenced to death in previous trial for genocide and crimes against humanity.

The trial is the third to be held by the Iraqi High Tribunal, an Iraqi court set up with US assistance to probe crimes committed by Saddam's former regime.

Up to 100,000 Shias were allegedly killed when Saddam's loyalists put down an uprising in southern Iraq launched by deserting soldiers retreating from their defeat in Kuwait and local citizens.

Prosecutors at the "1991 Intifada (Uprising) Trial" will argue that tens of thousands of Shias were systematically killed by Saddam's southern army after they rose up against his regime in the wake of the first Gulf War.

Shia rebels and civilians were massacred in brutal crackdowns around the holy Shia cities of Najaf and Karbala and in the Hill and Basra regions, after the US-led coalition decided to halt its
