THE north of the country was overwhelmed. The people of remoter districts, such as Kurigram, were completely cut off from the rest of the country. The Jamuna , like other major rivers, rose 125 cm above the danger level inundating the town of Sirajganj. The river's char islands and the people who lived on them simply disappeared. As the floodwaters rolled down river to the sea the big cities, Dhaka then Chittagong, were hit hard. ICDDRB saw record numbers of patients crowding their cholera hospital.
