

WEB-BASED INFO PORTAL 'THE EDITOR' LAUNCHED Exercise freedom to ensure free, fair election by Dec '08

Speakers urge media

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Speakers at a launching ceremony of a web-based news agency yesterday urged the media to exercise freedom to ensure a free and fair election by December 2008.

They said the people of Bangladesh are politically conscious and they know which newspaper is practising embedded and bottle-fed journalism and which one is playing a pro-people and balanced role.

Speaking at the launching ceremony of 'The Editor', a web-based information portal and resources, at the National Press Club in the city, the speakers also discussed various issues regarding recent journalistic practice in the country.

The Editor has officially appeared as a new web-based news agency and is committed to practice 'community journalism'.

The new thing in it is that people from all over the country can actively participate in reporting. The web-address is www.the-editor.net.

Speaking as chief guest, veteran journalist ABM Musa said, "We badly needed '111', otherwise we would have got a February 15-like election. The media should not do anything that will make room for the caretaker government to linger in the electoral process."

"Similarly, if the caretaker government is truly committed to its roadmap, it need not announce the election schedule everyday...this type of announcement can create mistrust in people on the prospect of election," he added.

Appreciating Bangladesh media for its unique way of journalistic practice, Musa said, "Still some newspapers are twisting news...and very often they are publishing exaggerated news which is coming from unverified sources."

Emphasising the role of internet-based news agency, Prof Anu Muhammad said the web-based news has become the 'alternative media' and now considered to be a 'counter hegemony' to 'controlled media' across the world.

"The US people had been kept away from news very cleverly. They never knew the aggressive role of the US government and the massacre it is carrying out in Iraq and Afghanistan. At that time internet became the source of getting balanced news and it started changing the mindset...People are now launching anti-war movement," he observed.

He said pro-people bias is a healthy practice in journalism but ruling-class bias is not only worth abandoning but also dangerous.

Maj Gen (Rtd) Syed Muhammad Ibrahim, Editor Dipu Hasan and Managing Editor Dr Shamim Talukdar of The Editor also spoke on the occasion.

Chechnya referendum on Dec 2

AFP, Moscow

Chechnya will hold a referendum on December 2, voting on changes to the local constitution which would extend the republic's presidential and parliamentary terms and slash the number of lawmakers, the electoral commission's chief told AFP.

"(Chechnya's) president (Ramzan Kadyrov) suggested extending the presidential and parliamentary mandate from four to five years, as well as abolish one of the parliament's chambers and bring down the number of deputies" to 41, Ismail Baikhanov explained late Friday.

"The parliament would also have the right to make changes to the constitution, also the president would not be elected but appointed," Baikhanov said.

The referendum would be held on December 2 to coincide with the elections to Russia's State Duma, the lower house of parliament, which would allow the war-torn republic to reduce costs.

Located between the Caspian and Black Seas in the Caucasus mountains, Chechnya fought wars for independence from Russia in 1994-1996 and again from 1999.

The Kremlin-backed Kadyrov, who was sworn in as Chechnya's president in April, is accused by human rights organisations of personal involvement in disappearances and torture.
