

Shrimps stumble in EU markets for hazardous antibiotics

Exporters call for improving situation before EU FVO team arrives on October 16

ABDULLAH AL MAHMUD

Frozen food exporters call for identifying origin of two hazardous antibiotics that contaminate shrimps and helping the potential sector sustain its growing market.
Nitrofuram metabolites and Chloramphenicol usually contaminate shrimps, the second largest revenue earner after readymade garments (RMG).
Detection of Nitrofuram metabolites and Chloramphenicol prompted re-dispatch of the exported shrimps and caused huge loss to the concerned exporters, they said.
They also urged the authorities concerned to improve skills and process for detecting antibiotics in fishes as well as developing infrastructures around the fish processing plants before the European Union's Food and Veterinary Office (FVO) mission arrives in Dhaka on October 16.
The FVO mission will be inspecting hygienic compliance at every step from farming to processing of shrimps to allow continuation of import to the EU countries, said the sources at Bangladesh Frozen Food Exporters' Association (BFFEA).

The delegation is also likely to examine operation of the liquid chromatography mass spectrophotometer (LCMSMS) machine at Department of Fisheries (DoF) laboratory to suggest recognition of the tests and certification made here, they said.
Bangladeshi shrimp had been enjoying an increasing demand in the European and the US markets earning $ 456.98 million in 2006-2007 Financial Year (FY) against $403.82 million in 2005-2006 FY, sources said.
Some poultry feed and chemicals used in hatcheries are believed to have the hazardous anti-biotic when a primary investigation also has revealed presence of anti-biotic in two such feed - Nirbili and Diamond, said the sources.

Department of Fisheries (DoF) at a meeting on August 8 in 2006 formed a residue monitoring team headed by Mokammel Hossain, director general (DG) of DoF, to probe contamination of shrimps.
The meeting decided to take measures as per the findings and suggestions of the monitoring team and provide the fisheries officers at district and upazila levels with training for monitoring the shrimp hatcheries, encircles and processing plants.
The exporters said only the feed and chemicals used in the hatcheries of saline water shrimps might not be the sole agent of the antibiotic as its presence was mostly reported in prawns cultivated in fresh water.
They said different poultry feeds and insecticides also might contain the antibiotic that can easily find way to prawn and shrimp encircles through poultry litter or rainwater.
In this regard BFFEA Senior

Vice-President Maksudur Rahman said, "Origin of the antibiotic, whatever it might be, should be found out first as its detection in a single fish might bring about re-dispatch or destruction of a whole container."
"As such, all the attention should be focused on finding out the origin of the antibiotic to put an end to contamination of fishes as per the suggestion of the residue monitoring team," he said.
Mokammel said preparation of the investigation report is taking time since some tests had to be done in Singapore due to lack of equipment in the country.
"Two Dhaka University teachers are now carrying out research and helping prepare the report which will be submitted soon," he told The Daily Star over phone on Monday.
Sources said the buyers at the port of import ask the exporters to take back the dispatch within two months if the antibiotic is detected in the shrimps.

After expiry of the given time they destroy the fishes with antibiotic and the exporters are to bear the expenses of destruction, said the sources.
As such, the LCMSMS machine was installed at the cost of Tk 3.5 crore to test fishes before export. The machine went into operation on an experimental basis in June this year that conducted over 15 tests so far.
The exporters, however, said the buyers might not accept the tests until EU FVO or US Food and Drugs Administration (FDA), recognise those. The two bodies allow import of frozen fish to EU countries and US after examining Hazard Analysis Critical Control Point (HACCP) compliance.
They called for enhancing skill and capacity of machineries, technicians and test for authentic reports and proper certification in the country.

Illegal occupants encroach on the banks of the river Karnaphuli just beside the entry point of Chaktai Khal (canal) on the west of Shah Amanat Bridge. The encroachment is going on at a time when Chittagong Development Authority and Chittagong City Corporation are conducting massive drive to recover the Chaktai canal.

CDA drives against illegal structures go in vain

SHAHIDUL ISLAM

The unauthorised portions of shopping malls and commercial and residential structures that were demolished in recent months have gradually been recaptured in the port city.
These are happening due to the indifference and lack of proper monitoring by the authorities concerned.
The Chittagong Development Authority (CDA) knocked down the unauthorised portions of the malls or buildings for not keeping parking spaces in the underground or for violating the design.
The shop and building owners occupied the demolished portions of the structures in few days after the CDA eviction team had left the sites in question. Many of the owners have hanged banners that read "Construction of parking space is going on as per order of CDA" to camouflage the CDA.
A shop owner at the six-storied shopping mall Munni Plaza on Bayezid

Bostami Road hung a banner within few days of demolition saying 'work for parking space is on.'
But in reality there was no parking space. The owner occupied the cleared space and extended his shop to that portion again. When asked, shop owner Mintu Chowdhury said he didn't recapture the parking space at all.
The CDA in the posh OR Nizam Road area in July demolished all the underground structures, including departmental shop and pharmacy of nine-storied Royal Hospital & Clinic for violating original design. After few weeks, both the shop and drug store started again their businesses on the space, albeit in reduced scale.
"We never violated the original design, rather we had taken all necessary permission during construction of the floors and spaces of this hospital building," said one of the building owners seeking anonymity.
Some high-rise commercial buildings at GEC Intersection, Agrabad Sheikh Mujib Road and Nasirabad have also shown disregard to the CDA drive by occupying demolished portions.

Traders at the ever-busy New Market and its adjoining areas, taking advantage of CDA's indifference, recaptured the open spaces and are doing their business without any problem.
After present caretaker government assumed power in January, the CDA strengthened its drive against the illegal structures and the violation of CDA design. As of yet, they demolished or cleared over 1,500 structures across the city.
CDA Authorisation Officer Ashraful Islam said they face difficulty in continuous monitoring and updating of their drives due to the shortage of manpower. He said the CDA won't spare the owners who have recaptured the demolished space.
CDA Chairman Shah Mohammad Akhtaruddin said they will launch a fresh drive against the violators of rule soon.
