Different government and non-government organizations, the armed forces and educational institutions offered support. Different fund-raising programs including concerts and meena-bazars were organized in schools, colleges and universities all across the country.

Booths sprang up in cafeterias and common rooms to collect money, clothes and dry foods for the poor and unprivileged flood-stricken people. Blood donation programs were launched to help those who were affected by post-flood diseases. Students themselves ventured out to different districts, far from their home cities to actively participate in the flood relief operations. Students of medical colleges ventured out with medicines and offered free medical check-up to the flood-affected areas.

We, from Star Campus heartily appreciate each and everyone who has come forward in this hour of need of the country. We hope that all the rehabilitation work continues smoothly to recover from the catastrophe at the earliest possible time.
