Durga Puja, the grand festival

In the 'Ramayana', Lord 'Rama' along with his brother and the army of monkeys lead by Hanuman went to 'Lanka' to rescue his wife, Sita, who was abducted and imprisoned by the ten-headed 'Ravana', the king of the Demons in Lanka.

Before his final battle with 'Ravana', Lord 'Rama' sought the blessings of Devi 'Durga' for defeating 'Ravana'.

He was given to understand that the Goddess would be pleased only if she was worshipped with one hundred Blue Lotuses. After travelling and searching the whole world, Lord 'Rama' gathered only ninety-nine Blue Lotuses. So he finally decided to offer one of his eyes, which resembled Blue Lotuses. Durga, being pleased with the devotion of 'Rama', appeared and blessed him for the battle.

The fierce and decisive battle started on the day of 'Saptami' and Ravana was finally defeated and killed on the 'Sandhiksha' i.e. the crossover period between Ashtami, the next day and Navami, the day after. 'Ravana' was cremated on Dashami.

The main ritual of Durga Puja spans a period of four days. However, in case of traditional and household pujas, the festivities last till ten days. Debi-Paksha is the name given to the fortnight from the new moon till the next full moon. This is the most propitious time for performing holy rites. The ritual of drawing the eyes on the image of the goddess is called chakkhu-daan. Symbolising the process of infusing the image with the power of vision, this is done on Mahalaya, the day of the new moon.

The main puja starts from Shasthi, which is the sixth day after the new moon. On Saptami, the image of the goddess is infused with life through a process called Bodhon. Early in the morning, the pran of the Devi is put inside the image after it is brought from a nearby river through the medium of a banana plant, called the Kola Bou. The Kola Bou, bathed and draped in a new yellow saree, resembles a newly wed bride. Ashtami is universally accepted as the culminating point of the four-day celebrations. It was on this day that Durga had killed Mahishasura. The ritual of Sandhipuja marks Sandhiksha, the juncture between Ashtami and Nabami. The main attraction of Nabami is the Maha-Arati held in the evening. On Dashami, the image is immersed in a river, and people bid a sorrowful farewell to the Mother Goddess, and the wait begins for yet another year.

Bijoya is a special ritual whereby peace and good relations are reaffirmed. Families exchange sweets and people embrace each other, vowing brotherhood. Bijoya continues till the next new moon, when Kali Puja is held.

The community puja, the most-coveted festival in the year, has transcended geographical boundaries. The four-day fair - with its splendour and mesmerising look - is too beautiful to be called a mere festival. It has become an indispensable part of every one's life.

exotic one! Recently, I had the opportunity to visit the museum currently situated in the Jamuna resort, adjacent to the JMB.

The vast collection of animals ranging from foxes to tiny insects appeared to be absolutely fantastic! The dedication and spirit with which the museum was built up appeared to be exemplary. I had visited the National Museum and the Science Museum earlier, but the collection at the Jamuna resort appeared to be the richest to me.

The museum is carrying collection of more than fifty varieties of fishes, snakes, birds, frogs etc of each type. Most of the samples are being preserved in formalin. The space in which the museum is situated appears to be insufficient vis-à-vis the collection. The area is also not big enough. It has been learnt that steps to expand the area of the museum did not turn into reality. The most unfortunate thing about the museum is that only one man is looking after it. The only man is handling everything from stuffing of the animals to preserving them. Earlier, another person associated with it left the job.

The museum could provide an excellent source to carry out research on various animals and their behaviour. Besides, school children may be taken there as part of study tours. We see on Animal Planet and other foreign channels how people like Steve Erwin (who eventually sacrificed his life) play with animals. We also see how the countries take so much care of animals. Nevertheless, as a developing country, we could at least try to do something for the animals! In doing so, measures to extend such museums could be the first step. In our country, there are so many rich people and pressure groups working with wildlife and nature, so it does not appear to be very difficult to have some sponsors. Therefore, it is my humble request to the government, private organisations, universities, TV Channels and other concerned quarters to come forward and do something positive for the museum, thereby opening a new horizon in relation to wildlife.

Awful!

How much money does a man need? It's awful to see big guns of the society involved in crimes like extortion, land grabbing, relief money embezzlement and what not! And they also own a couple of TV channels! See, the age of innocence is lost. Greed has grabbed everything!

Religion

By discarding religion we are compromising with morality and breaking away from family values. The west and many other countries are paying dearly for allowing free sex and free society.

It is only Islam that has drawn a line between man and woman to ensure a happy family and a respectful relationship within it.

Good news

This is a fact that the relationship between the BDR (Bangladesh Rifles) and the BSF (Border Security Force of India) is not a happy one. We the readers of newspapers are used to reading news like an innocent Bangladeshi farmer being gunned down or valuables of Bangladeshi frontier villagers looted eventually borders skirmishes take place.

But a milestone was cemented on October 7, 2007 to improve this fragile relationship when the BSF handed over to their Bangladeshi counterpart three most wanted Bangladeshi criminals who were earlier arrested by Kolkata police. Such an incident is unprecedented as an extradition treaty between these two neighbouring countries is yet to be signed.

We the Bangladeshis from every walk of life wholeheartedly hail this step and appeal to the leaders of both the countries to sign an extradition treaty - the sooner the better.

Migration to Canada

Those who want to migrate to Canada should know that the process of Canadian immigration has become more simplified. One can easily assess her/his possibility of qualifying by checking the point-based system at <http://www.cic.gc.ca/english/immigrate/ind-ex.asp>.

Those who are considering coming to Canada or are in the process and waiting for the file approval should have this clear in their minds that getting jobs in their respective fields may not be at all easy. But if somebody wants to change his profession and wants to try to do something different, then it's easy to do so here in Canada.

I would suggest the youngsters who have completed their graduation and want to enroll for master's program at university to work and gain work experience in Bangladesh to qualify for the Canadian immigration. Once you are in Canada you can start the master's program with a university that has the best coop program or job placement program. Most of the lucrative jobs are being offered to those who are competent management trainees placed by the universities and colleges in Canada. Those who want to pursue higher studies in Canada should bring manageable funds to finance the program. Once you become Canadian residents you will have access to OSAP in Ontario. OSAP is a need-based fund available for training and education program. Beside you will have the privilege of paying subsidised tuition fees (three times cheaper than the foreign students). Overall it's wise to land in Canada as an immigrant at a much a younger age which will help you to adapt to the Canadian culture, climate and norms easily. This country requires skilled manpower to use its resources.

One of the major advantages for the Bangladeshis who want to migrate to Canada is the religious freedom in Canada. Canada's second largest population (about 2% of the total population) are Muslims followed by Jewish 1.1%, Buddhist 1%, Hindu 1% and Sikh .9%.

Expansion of Advisory Council

The question of expansion of the Council of Advisers has generated a scope for discussion in the country. Although the need for expansion of the Council was felt quite for a long time, the idea could not be implemented due to the absence of constitutional provision to that effect. But there is no restriction to appoint consultants or experts to facilitate the functioning of the Ministry or Divisions.

Since lots of activities are to be performed by this caretaker government, there should be resource persons like consultants to assist the Advisers and with the rank and status of state ministers or deputy ministers.

Political parties might feel that the CTG should not undertake much development activities and some major decisions be left for the elected government.

But as we observe now that the future elected government might be old wine in new bottle and might not be wise enough to do justice to the cause of the nation, we suggest the present CTG go ahead with major decisions and activities needed to eradicate poverty and achieve the MDGs.

Jamuna Museum

I want to draw the attention of the readers and of the authorities at least for a while. When the construction of the Jamuna Multipurpose Bridge (JMB) commenced, a measure was taken to conduct a survey in relation to the wildlife in that area. A museum was built where various remains of animals collected across the area have been preserved. Over the years, the collection has become an
