

BSMMUH still lacks general emergency facilities

MAHBUBA ZANNAT

Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujib Medical University Hospital (BSMMUH), the lone medical university hospital in the country, lacks general emergency facilities, causing suffering to seriously ill patients.

Nine years have passed since the inception of BSMMUH, but it is yet to see a general emergency department despite having the complete infrastructure.

However, there are emergency management systems only for neurosurgery, kidney, coronary care and gynaecology patients.

"It is necessary to have a well organised emergency block housing emergency units of all departments," said Prof Iqbal Arslan, of the biochemistry department recently.

Another senior teacher of the university said the huge infrastructure of the university could be utilised properly by setting up emergency departments. Initially, general emergency service can be introduced at the out-patient department in the afternoon.

"When massive casualty takes place, many patients come to seek treatment at the hospital. But they are sent back because of the lack of emergency facilities. As a result, other hospitals, such as Dhaka Medical College and Hospital (DMCH), have to deal with a large number of casualty patients," he said referring to the bomb blast incident at Ramna Batamul.

"Though emergency service at that time was crucial to their survival, we had to refer the patients to different hospitals as we don't have emergency management system," said another physician.

On the one hand, lack of emergency service system is causing suffering to critically injured patients. On the other hand, the university students are being deprived of learning how to manage emergency patients.

"The emergency management system should be introduced as an integral part of medical education here immediately as medical education is more practical than theoretical," Prof Iqbal said.

The emergency department of neurosurgery has 48 seats for both male and female patients. During a visit to the department recently, this correspondent found that only two nurses were running to each bed to help the patients.

"As soon as the clock strikes 2:00pm, the hospital becomes almost vacant. If the condition of any patients deteriorates, duty doctors or the nurses try to treat them as per the direction of the specialist physicians over telephone," said a nurse.

"If the BSMMUH gets an emergency department, pressure on the DMCH would decline and the patients would also receive better treatment," said a doctor at the department of Neurology.

This correspondent also found patients with severe head injuries lying on the corridor in front of Ward Nos. 31 and 32 because of the dearth of seats.

Talking to The Daily Star, Pro-Vice Chancellor Prof MA Majid said they are willing to introduce general emergency service at the hospital.

"We feel the need to have a general emergency management service in this centre of excellence. But the infrastructure and the financial support are not adequate. Besides, there is a lack of skilled manpower," he said.

At the same time, he admitted that they have not sought financial support from the government in this regard.

Soon after the inception of the university in 1998, an initiative was taken to set up a 'Trauma and Emergency' centre on the ground floor of Cabin Block. In 2001, it was again decided to set up the centre near the Cardiac ICU, but it is yet to be implemented.
