Seek ways to face challenges of natural disasters

President urges researchers at 3rd Convocation of Brac University

UNB, Dhaka

President Iajuddin Ahmed yesterday called upon the scholars, researchers and scientists of the country to seek ways of reducing the loss of life and property and to face the challenges of the natural phenomenon.

He said: "Bangladesh is a country of immense potentials. But our cherished development is being hindered again and again by the repeated natural catastrophe including cyclone, flood, tidal surge and natural degradation. The phenomenon of global warming is also another alarming issue for us."

The president was addressing the 3rd Convocation of Brac University at Bangladesh-China Friendship Conference Centre in the morning.

Iajuddin reminded that the development and progress of a nation mainly depends on its educated young generation. "Our attention should be focused on the proper nourishment of the young population."

The president, who is also the chancellor of the university, said that as the cradle of wisdom, the universities have great role to play in cultivating intellect, academic spirit, and also imparting quality education with a view to building a knowledge-based society.

"In an age of globalisation, we would have to provide market and need-based education along with conventional arts and sciences so that our students can face the global challenges confidently."

He expressed happiness that the Brac University has already introduced some unconventional degrees like Masters in Public Health, Masters in Disaster Management, and Masters in Governance and Development.

The president also thanked the university authorities for commencing such well-timed subjects and taking the institution to great heights in collaboration with some of the world's topnotch academic institutions.

He said: "As responsible member of the society, we have to facilitate equal opportunities to the underprivileged section of the society so that a balanced and prosperous nation is established."

Iajuddin urged the university authorities to further promote a strong culture of excellence in scholarship as well as research for generating more intellectuals and professionals.

Congratulating the graduating students, he said: "You must put your wisdom at your every endeavour and thinking so that the congenial atmosphere of living and state of justice at all levels are upheld."

Remember, university education is not the mark of closing rather it is just the beginning."

He added: "It needs creativity, integrity, patriotism and love for people in developing yourself and serving humanity."

He also urged all to work unitedly for building a happy and prosperous abode for all.

Brac University Vice-Chancellor Prof. Jamilur Reza Chowdhury and pro-VC Dr Salehuddin Ahmed also addressed the function. Prof Rehman Sobhan was the convocation speaker.
