

An elderly man rests in front of a poster of Cuban ailing president Fidel Castro in Havana on February 15, 2008. Cuba will release seven political prisoners, four of whom are among a group of 75 dissidents arrested in a crackdown by Fidel Castro in 2003, Spain's foreign minister said Friday. Four members of the group of 75 would be granted asylum in Spain along with their family members, said Miguel Angel Moratinos.

A portrait of Osama bin Laden made out of teddy bears by Brazilian artist Marta Neves at ARCO, the Spanish international contemporary art fair in Madrid on February 14, 2008. This year 295 galleries from 34 countries will be showing works with this year's special guest country being Brazil.

People light candles and add trinkets to a memorial set up for those killed in yesterday's shooting at Cole Hall on the campus of Northern Illinois University February 15, 2008 in De Kalb, Illinois. Six people are dead including the gunman and 16 other people were left wounded after a young man pulled out a shotgun and began firing inside a lecture hall. This is the fourth shooting at a U.S. school within a week.

A man carrying a typical Peruvian "cajon" (percussion instrument) walks next to the "Love Stone" -a rocky formation shaped naturally as a couple hugging each other- in the Pachacamac valley, more than 20 km southeast Lima, on February 14, 2008. An Andean myth tells that the stone was shaped by the hand of a pre-Inca goddess in love called Cavillaca. AFP PHOTO