Young Bangladeshi photojournalist, Andrew Biraj, won the prestigious World Press Photo Joop Swart Masterclass award, says a press release. The award was announced recently from Amsterdam, Netherlands. Biraj is the only photojournalist selected for the highly competitive award from Asia. Eleven other photographers from across the globe were awarded the prize for their outstanding photojournalistic body of work. Every year the World Press Photo Foundation selects 12 young photographers below 30 years of age from the globe for the prize. Earlier, the foundation had nominated a total of 132 photographers. Biraj submitted two sets of photo stories.

One of them was titled 'State Excluded', which dealt with the stranded Pakistanis, highlighting the daily struggle in the Bihar camps of Dhaka. The other one was named 'Tragic Fibre', which depicted the miseries of the jute mill workers of Khulna. The winners were selected by an independent, international selection committee consisting of the president of Cuban Aurora Photos José Azel, French art director of the National Geographic Magdalena Herrera; Director of Dutch Foam Fotografiemuseum Marloes Krijnen; Danish photographer Erik Refner; Italian photographers Berlingske Tidende and Massimo Sragusa and photographer Agenzia Contrasto.

The purpose of the Joop Swart Masterclass, which was introduced in 1994, is to further young and talented photographers' photojournalistic insights. The other winners are Peter van Agtmael (the Netherlands/USA); Martina Bacigalupo and Massimo Berruti (both from Italy); Michael Christopher Brown (USA); Agnes Dherbys (France); Inaki Domingo (Spain); Philipp Ebeling (Germany); Clemence de Limburg (Belgium); David Magnusson (Sweden); Jehad Nga (Libya/USA) and James Pomerantz (UK/USA). They will gather in Amsterdam from 8 to 13 November to receive the awards and meet the fellow masters.

Nandita Das: Taking a social conscience to the screen

With a master's degree in social work, Indian actress Nandita Das is keen to talk about women's empowerment and human rights than participate in the glamour of Bollywood. Das is featured in Talk Asia on CNN where she talks about her directorial movie debut In Such Times. She talked about her new film project, her controversial choice of film roles in Fire and Bawandar, an emotional visit to Sri Lanka in the aftermath of the Tsunami, and the honour of being a juror at the prestigious Cannes Film Festival. For an actress who "kind of stumbled upon acting" and "didn't ever want to be an actor to begin with," Das' talents are well-recognized, most recently winning the French award of "Ordre Des Arts Et Des Lettres" for her contribution to cinema. Das said that she acts because "there are stories to tell...wonderful stories," and she explains how the lack of realism in typical Bollywood fare never attracted her: "There's a certain kind of cinema that I don't relate to...I didn't even grow up watching them." Das brushes off the controversy stirred up by her role in the film Fire: "The bigger evil was that how can you talk about homosexuality in a society that would rather not talk about it." And of her role in Bawandar playing a woman who is gang raped: "I often tell women that you've got to be strong, why do you feel humiliated when you go through sexual abuse?" But she feels: "I don't think women's empowerment is ever going to be possible without a society overall wanting to change things." About her film, In Such Times -- a movie about how acts of violence affects its characters' life -- Das said, "I think it's a universal story, I think we are all concerned about violence...at some level, there is a collective desire for peace and it's good to examine yourself." Besides telling stories on screen, Das also shared the experience of visiting Sri Lanka and seeing the children in the aftermath of the Tsunami, she says: "They subconsciously get stored somewhere in your mind and form your overall thinking, or they help you to be a little more sensitive than one was." She also talked about a very special experience, being selected to be a member of the Cannes Film Festival jury: "The best part of being in Cannes was not just to see great films or to walk the red carpet and all the hype that is around it, but to have those sessions with 8 other brilliant minds..."
