

ROW OVER REINSTATEMENT OF JUDGES

Sharif's party to quit Pak cabinet today

AFP, AP, Islamabad

Former prime minister Nawaz Sharif said ministers from his party will resign from their posts today over differences regarding the reinstatement of judges sacked by President Pervez Musharraf.

"Our ministers will submit their resignations to the prime minister tomorrow," Sharif told a news conference after a crucial meeting of his Pakistan Muslim League-Nawaz (PML-N) here Monday.

However, he said his party would not take any decision that would strengthen what he called a "dictatorship" under Musharraf.

"We will not be part of any conspiracy aimed at strengthening dictatorships," he said.

"We want the unconditional, dignified and honourable return of the judges," he said, adding that his party would not destabilise the government. "We will not sit on opposition benches for the time being."

PML-N had nine ministers in the 24-member federal cabinet, formed six weeks ago.

The decision was taken here at a meeting of the parliamentary party and the central working committee of the PML-N chaired by Sharif.

The former premier called the meeting after negotiations in London with Asif Ali Zardari, co-chairman of the Pakistan People's Party, failed to bridge their differences over the restoration of some 60 judges.

Sharif expressed disappointment after the weekend talks with Zardari failed to resolve the deadlock.

He said he made sincere efforts but the deadlock could not be broken.

The two parties formed an alliance after defeating allies of Musharraf in February 18 elections. Sharif had given a May 12 deadline for reinstatement of the judges fired by Musharraf under emergency rule in November.

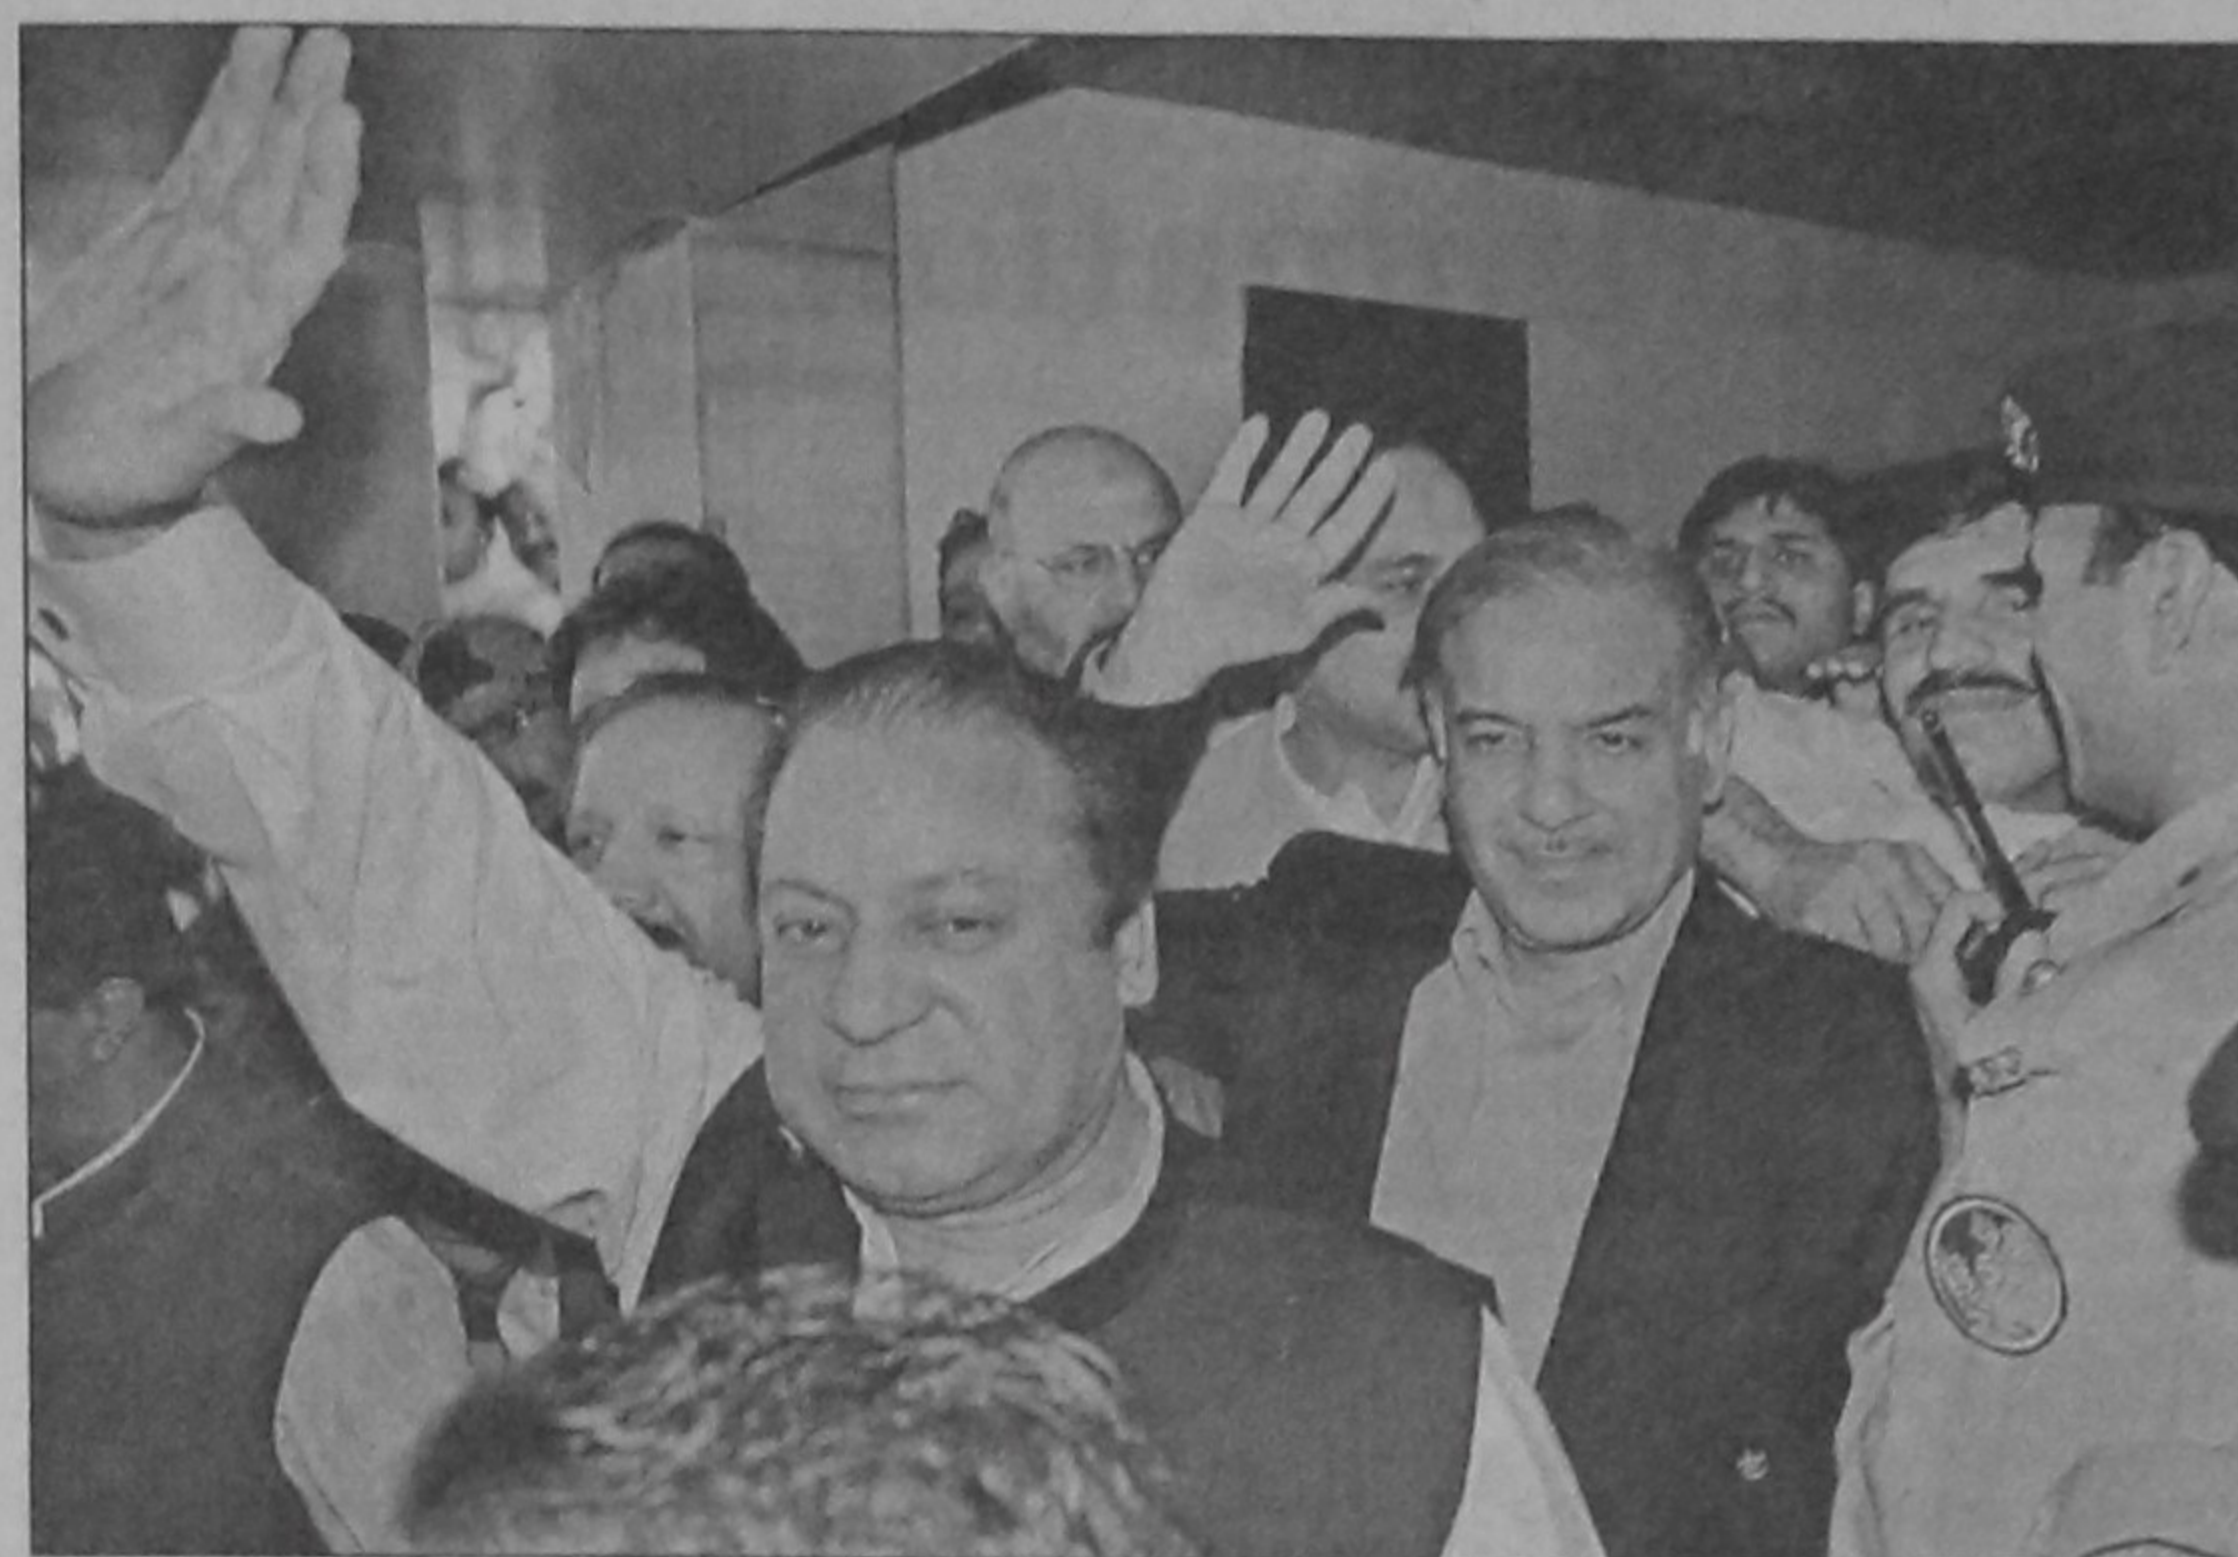

It remained unclear if the rift could break up the government or force fresh elections. That would be a serious setback to Pakistan's transition to democracy after eight years of military rule under Musharraf. The new government came to power just six weeks ago.

A coalition break-up could throw a political lifeline to the embattled president, who has taken a back seat in the day-to-day running of Pakistan since the new government took office.

Both parties still appear reluctant to sever ties. Although Sharif's party has threatened to quit the Cabinet a move that would distance it from the decisions of the government, it has hinted it would still support the government rather than join the opposition.

Both sides have called for a restoration of dozens of judges axed by Musharraf when he declared a state of emergency in November to forestall a Supreme Court ruling on his eligibility for office. But they have disagreed on exactly how to do it and weekend negotiations in London did not produce a deal.

Separatists kill 10 in India's northeast

AFP, Guwahati

Tribal separatist rebels shot dead at least 10 railway workers in two weekend attacks in India's restive northeast, police said yesterday.

Heavily armed rebels from the outlawed Dima Haram Daoga (DHD) group raided a railway construction site in Assam state Sunday.

"Seven people were killed on the spot when the militants fired indiscriminately with automatic weapons," said S. Singh, a senior police official.

In another attack, DHD rebels shot dead three railway construction workers on Saturday in the same district, south of Assam's main city Guwahati.

"The militant group had asked railway construction works to be stopped immediately," another police official said.

The rebels said the attacks were in retaliation for an Indian army operation in which 12 of their cadres were killed. The army however said no anti-insurgency operation had been conducted in recent days.

Commonwealth lifts Pakistan suspension

AFP, London

The Commonwealth re-admitted Pakistan as a full member yesterday after a six-month suspension triggered by a clampdown by President Pervez Musharraf, the grouping's secretary general said.

The suspension was lifted after a meeting of key ministers of the 53-nation Commonwealth in London.

The Commonwealth Ministerial Action Group (CMAG) agreed that since November "the government of Pakistan has taken positive steps to fulfil its obligations in accordance with Commonwealth fundamental values and principles."

"It accordingly decided that Pakistan is now restored to the councils of the Commonwealth," Kamlesh Sharma said, reading from a statement after the talks at the Commonwealth's Marlborough House headquarters.

Pakistan was suspended from the 53-nation Commonwealth on November 22 last year, with the organisation saying that conditions under President Pervez Musharraf were in violation of its fundamental values.

Musharraf had declared a state of emergency on November 3, placing the chief justice under house arrest, detaining lawyers, rights activists and opposition members and curbing press freedoms.

The Commonwealth ministers notably welcomed the fact that Musharraf had given up his military role, lifted the state of emergency, held elections and removed curbs on the mass media.

But it also urged Pakistan to "reinforce the independence of the judiciary and resolve current issues through the parliamentary process as soon as possible so that it contributes to democratic political stability in Pakistan."

"There (is) need for reform. In this regard it welcomes the new government's state intention to reform the election commission and enhance its independence," the statement added.

Rebel clash leaves 8 dead in Kashmir

AFP, Jammu

The death toll in a weekend gun-fight between Islamic rebels and troops in Indian-administered Kashmir has risen to eight, a senior military officer said yesterday.

The prolonged shootout that erupted Sunday in the Himalayan region's Samba area, 70 kilometres (44 miles) south of Kashmir's winter capital Jammu, came after a sharp drop in violence in recent months.

Three civilians, a photo-journalist, two soldiers and two militants died, said Lieutenant General Vinay Sharma, who oversaw the counter insurgency operation.

Iran-IAEA hold new round of nuke talks

AFP, Tehran

Iran and the UN nuclear watchdog held a new round of talks on Monday on Tehran's disputed atomic drive, the official IRNA news agency reported.

An unnamed source quoted by the agency said the talks, which meetings between Iranian officials and representatives of the International Atomic Energy Agency in April, would last three days.

The Iranian delegation is headed by Iran's ambassador to the UN agency, Ali Asghar Soltanieh while the agency's director for safeguard operations

Herman Nackaerts is heading the IAEA team, the source said.

IAEA chief Mohamed ElBaradei is due to report in June on Iran's nuclear programme to the body's board of governors and the UN Security Council, which has imposed three sets of sanctions on Tehran over its nuclear defiance.

In April, Iran and the IAEA held two rounds of talks concentrating on allegations that the Islamic republic conducted studies on how to design a nuclear bomb.

The so-called "weaponisation studies" stem from intelligence provided to the IAEA by some member states, but Iran insists that the talks are merely routine cooperation between the authorities and the agency.

Iran has refused to heed international demands to halt uranium enrichment, insisting that it has a right to the process to make nuclear fuel for meeting its increasing energy needs as a signatory to the nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty.

Highly enriched uranium can also make the fissile core of an atom bomb, but Tehran has vehemently denied Western allegations it is seeking to acquire nuclear weapons.

India planning to test fire 5000-km range missile

PTI, New Delhi

Buoyed by the string of successes with the intermediate range ballistic missile Agni-III, India is planning to test a missile with 5000 km range soon.

The test of the next series of Agni missiles will propel the country into the select group of nations, which have long range ballistic missiles.

Indicating that planning process for the test launch of such a missile was in final stages, Avinash Chander, Project Director of Agni-III, said today scientists were awaiting the government nod for carrying out the test flights which could be anytime by this year-end.

The launching of the 5,000-km range missile would entail strapping third stage booster rocket on Agni-III missiles powered by solid fuel propellant.

Along with longer range Agni missiles, India will also carry out further tests of its special naval missile, an acronym used by DRDO scientists for a submarine launched ballistic missile, and the second test of interceptor missile which will be undertaken by September-October.

Lanka opposition to mount legal challenge to govt polls win

AFP, Colombo

Sri Lanka's opposition said yesterday it planned to mount a legal challenge to the government's weekend win in key local elections in the east of the island.

The opposition said President Mahinda Rajapakse's party and his allies -- including Tamil Tiger rebel defectors -- used "terror" tactics to bully voters and intimidate rivals. The government insists the polls were free and fair.

"The opposition parties faced the terror of the government and a former terrorist group," Sri Lanka Muslim Congress (SLMC) leader Rauf Hakeem told reporters.

"The end result is virtual daylight robbery of voters in the east. We are collecting evidence to go before the courts and will start a street agitation campaign," said Hakeem, whose party is allied with the main opposition United National Party.

UNP leader Ranil Wickremesinghe said Sri Lanka was "taking another step towards dictatorship."

The polls were the first to be held in 20 years in the tsunami-hit and ethnically-mixed eastern districts of Batticaloa, Trincomalee and Ampara.

Parts of the region were controlled by the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE) until the government forced them out in a fierce offensive last year.

The president now wants to partially devolve power in the east from his ethnic Sinhalese-dominated government to ethnic Tamil allies in the Tamil People's Liberation Tigers (TMVP), made up of rebels who switched sides.

The TMVP are accused of continuing to carry guns, using child soldiers and intimidating locals. Their leader, who goes by the name de-guerre of Pillayan, wants to be the east's new chief minister.

The government pulled out of a truce with the LTTE in January, but says its decision to hold polls while the war rages in the north shows it is serious about addressing Tamil grievances and bringing the minority into the political process.

Rajapakse has hailed the result as "a clear mandate for peace through the defeat of terrorism, the strengthening of democracy and the development of the country."

US media predicts collapse of Pak govt

THE DAWN, Washington

US Assistant Secretary of State Richard Boucher has advised Pakistani leaders to avoid a confrontation with President Pervez Musharraf, the US media reported on Sunday.

Boucher met PPP leader Asif Ali Zardari and former Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif in London earlier on Sunday, but a US Embassy official in Islamabad said they did not discuss the judicial crisis.

The prestigious Wall Street Journal, however, quoted a senior PPP official as saying that the US official had urged the two leaders "not to take measures that could push the government into direct confrontation with Mr Musharraf".

The report also quoted federal Education Minister Ahsan Iqbal as saying that the PML-N "will have no justification to remain in the government if the judges were not reinstated".

Another report, distributed by a news agency, said that the failure of the talks over the judicial dispute in London had raised the "prospect that the three-month-old democratic government will collapse in disarray".

Nepali king attends sacrifice in rare public appearance

AFP, Dakshinkali

Nepal's embattled king, whose centuries-old dynasty faces its end within weeks, made a rare public appearance Monday for a ritual animal sacrifice aimed at preserving power, priests said.

"Panchabali (five animal sacrifice) is undertaken to get power, to get what you wish for and to ensure the wellbeing of the family," Mod Raj Bhattacharya, a royal priest told AFP at the elaborate ceremony.

"This puja (ceremony) will bring good consequences to the world and to Nepal."
