

French artist Antoine Le Menestrel gives a live night performance on the wall of the Bulgarian National Gallery for Foreign Arts in Sofia during the marking of the night of museums in Bulgaria.The art performance of Le Menestrel, who is a climber and a stuntman, describes his art work as a vertical dance, which is a combination of street art and alpinism, is unique and is performed for a first time in Bulgaria.

A man takes a glimpse of a car that was crushed by rocks along a road linking Yingxiu town in Wenchuan county, after a quake with a magnitude of 7.9 rocked China on May 12, in China's southwestern province of Sichuan. China ramped up efforts to stave off disease for millions of earthquake victims, as more miracle rescues amid the rubble offered hope in an increasingly desperate battle to save lives.

A participant displays a sticker on his head to mark the fourth International Day Against Homophobia (IDAHO) in Hong Kong. The International Day Against Homophobia, marked in most places around the world on May 17, was launched in 2005 to commemorate the day in 1990 when the World Health Organisation removed homosexuality from its list of disorders.

Tibetan spiritual Leader his holiness the Dalai Lama gestures as he addresses a gathering of supporters in the southern German city of Nuremberg. The Dalai Lama is on a five-day tour of Germany before going on to the United States, Australia, Britain and France aimed at keeping Tibet centre stage ahead of the Beijing Olympics in August.

AFP PHOTO