European markets chase Asia lower on inflation fears

AFP, London

European equities sank on Tuesday after sharper falls in Asia on widespread concern that sky-high oil prices will stoke inflation and force central banks to tighten credit, analysts said.

Investors were worried that rising energy costs and interest rates will hurt consumers and eat away at company profits, they added.

In European late morning deals, the British stock market slid 0.61 percent, French shares were down 0.79 percent and German equities shed 0.91 percent.

"Inflation is the Number 1 obsession in markets," Bernard McAlinden, strategist at NCB Stockbrokers in Ireland, told Dow Jones Newswires.

Investors "are increasingly worried about stagflation -- where the economy is slowing but without the interest-rate lever there to pull," he added.

In commodity markets, oil prices paused Tuesday above 139 dollars per barrel after the International Energy Agency warned that soaring crude costs would dampen energy demand growth in 2008.

However, prices remain not far off record peaks of nearly 140 dollars per barrel that were hit last Friday.

Dealers were waiting anxiously for trading to resume on Wall Street this afternoon after Federal Reserve chairman Ben Bernanke said Monday that "upside risks" to inflation were forcing the US central bank to be more vigilant.

His remarks added to speculation that the central bank may raise interest rates later this year in a policy U-turn after a string of interest rate cuts since September to try to ease a housing slump and credit crunch.

In Asia on Tuesday, Shanghai share prices plunged 7.7 percent, the biggest one-day percentage loss in around one year after the Chinese central bank announced fresh credit-tightening measures to contain inflation.

Hong Kong slumped 4.21 percent, Sydney ended 2.8 percent lower and Seoul shed 1.9 percent.

Tokyo closed down 1.13 percent as investors worried about high oil costs, a sharp fall in Chinese stocks and the uncertain outlook for the global economy, dealers said.

"Beijing's latest move on credit tightening sent further blows to the already weak market after four consecutive trading day losses," said Yan Li, an analyst with Southwest Securities in Shanghai.

She said the bank's move was a surprise as the market had not anticipated any further tightening ahead of inflation figures later this week.

The People's Bank of China hiked the reserve ratio for commercial banks for the fifth time this year, a move that is expected to curb bank lending and slow economic growth and investment flows into the stock market.

Chinese markets were closed for a public holiday on Monday, when other regional bourses tumbled after Wall Street's slide last week.

"Markets (in Asia) are down between one and four percent, although Australia, Hong Kong and China are playing catch-up after being closed yesterday for various holidays," added ABN Amro analyst Melinda Smith.

Local inter-bank FX market was active on Tuesday. There was ample demand for the USD in the market, and the USD remained range bound against the BDT.

Money Market

Money market was active on Tuesday. The call money market eased a little and most deals ranged between 8.00 and 10.00 percent compared to 9.00-12.00 percent the previous working day.

International Market

The dollar strengthened broadly, reaching a three-month high against the yen non Tuesday after Federal Reserve Chairman Ben Bernanke warned on the risks of inflation, stoking expectations of US interest rate rises. Bernanke said on Monday that the central bank would strongly resist rising inflation expectations, and that the latest surge in energy prices is adding to the dangers from price pressures. He added that the risk of a substantial downturn in the US economy has receded, sparking broad dollar gains and sending US bond yields soaring. The dollar was up 0.3 percent against the yen, having earlier hit a three month high of 106.83 yen. The euro was down 0.43 percent against the dollar.
