

MANY FACES OF KAMALAPUR

KAMALAPUR railway station has no time to sleep. Every night when the city goes into slumber it remains wide awake to greet thousands of people coming in and going out of the capital. Not all come here as passengers -- a good number of homeless comes in quest of a nice place for a nap or a good night's sleep. Beggars, urchins and pickpockets roam around. Vagabonds looking for a safe shelter looks for vacant bogies, which will not move for the night. After dusk the railway station wears a different look with activities of anti-socials.
